How Mrs. Mooney Brings the Feminine Appeal Into Fight to Aid Her Husband

Wife of Man Convicted in Bomb Case Proclaims Contempt for "Sob Stuff," but Uses Native Abilities With Telling Effect.

By MARGUERITE MARTYN.

THE feminine appeal enters into the celebrated Mooney case, now that the wife of the principal, since she herself has been released from jail, has taken the platform in his behalf. The sentence of Thomas J. Mooney, convicted in California courts of complicity in the bomb outrage which caused the deaths of eight participants in the preparedness parade, July 22, 1916, at San Francisco, as is well known, has been commuted from death to life imprisonment, and a new trial, according to California law, appears to be within the jurisdiction of no legal power. Mrs. Mooney's sole hope is that the President, if not upon the merits of the case, may be brought to appeal for a favorable settlement on the basis of averting industrial strife and strikes.

With the threatened nation-wide strike July 4, Mrs. Mooney declares she has nothing to do. She does not say a word about a strike. It may be significant, however, that she is scheduled for as many addresses before labor organizations as can be crammed into the time up to that date.

Likewise she disclaims the conscious feminine appeal. Forcibly she expresses a contempt for "sob stuff." Certainly she discards one well-known blandishment by appearing in a suit five years old. It is the very one whose conspicuous white buttons identify her with her husband looking at the preparedness parade in the famous photograph which the Mooney defenders assert was taken from the roof of a building a mile and a quarter from the scene of the explosion.

Suit as "Documentary Evidence."

She wears this suit merely as documentary evidence, which she submits with numerous other exhibits in the way of photographs, and those letters in which have been detected, she says, subornation of perjury on the part of the prosecution.

Obviously the reason for appealing to labor organizations is because labor all over the world has become interested in the case. But Mrs. Mooney further claims the right to the sympathy of labor for the reason that what time she could spare from her work as a prosperous music teacher she devoted to assisting her husband in organizing the street car men of San Francisco.

She declares in evidence of her loyal citizenship that it is three generations since her ancestors came from Ireland, that it was a great-grandfather of hers who first took Kentucky blue grass into Kansas and made that State another blue grass State. But whether she will have it so or no, a pair of typical Irish blue eyes with black lashes, the gift of eloquence, native wit and a keen sense of the dramatic in narrative which are birthrights that go with that nationality, are points peculiar to a personality which is getting in its work, as she goes about making speeches.

I heard her make an address at a street car men's picnic at Wallner's Grove which may have failed of a desired effect, only because all the street car men were away at work, only their wives, children and a few officials with badges being present.

"It was a big American flag extending over seven stories of the building which prevented our viewing the parade from my studio windows, and caused us to seek a vantage point on the roof. It was the same flag which drove 21 other occupants of the building to the roof to provide evidence of our whereabouts at the time. That flag just seemes to have said, 'Mooneys, you are about to be framed. Go up to the roof. Let me protect you.' It was a young Y. M. C. A. boy who took the picture, including the clock across the street and the shadow on the buildings which established the time of day and our whereabouts at the time the bomb exploded a mile and a quarter away. If we had had a choice of witnesses we could not have found a nicer one than that innocent Y. M. C. A. boy. Doesn't it seem as if the Providence were on our side in providing just such evidence as the flag and Y. M. C. A. boy?"

This paragraph I quote from her addresses as evidence of her dramatic sense.

Reviews Case Concisely.

She reviews the case with remarkable concreteness and conciseness considering its complications and ramifications extending now to labor questions in other countries. It is due to 1,900,000 copies of reports that have been sent through the mails that it is so widely known, said Mrs. Mooney, and she makes a point of the fact that although local interests would have suppressed them, there was nothing in the reports to warrant their exclusion from the mails elsewhere. She sketches the history of one of the prosecutors, charging him with lining up with big interests opposed to organization of labor over a long period of years.

She accuses him of being addicted to the trick of exploding bombs to excite sympathy for his interests at psychological moments. One which exploded on the Governor's doorstep on election eve, she classified as a desperate eleventh-hour attempt to get votes for administration candidates, which had its effect upon people, women voters, so she said, being swayed by emotion rather than judgment. The preparedness parade bomb, being coincident with Mooney's activity in the unionization of car men and with labor's hesitation on the subject of preparedness, was calculated to take advantage of the patriotism of people with that emotion already inflamed, and was typical of this prosecutor's methods, she says.

"Is it not strange," she asks, "that no question of its being an alien enemy trick ever got into the trial?"

"Isn't it strange, too," she asks, "that the detectives we observed watching my studio while we were trying to organize the car men were the very same men afterward employed by the State?"

She quotes from various Government reports, especially that of Densmore, of the Labor Department, in which are found much material discrediting witnesses for the prosecution.

"We always employ Government investigators whenever we can. And does it seem likely we should seek to place ourselves in the hands of such powerful agents if we were guilty?"

She tells how she and her husband departed upon a vacation trip before charges were brought against them; how, upon making port after a lake cruise, they were confronted with big headlines, "World-wide Search for the Mooneys." How immediately they started for home but were met and removed from the train by officers and held at Santa Rosa two days while newspapers issued extras about the sensational capture of the Mooneys. How she was kept in a vile cell for two days without change of raiment, without curling irons until at last the reporters were admitted to see how guilty she looked. Any woman's idea of the third degree, I submit!

A Glimpse of Her History.

At length she recites, with telling effect upon an audience of whose sympathy she is so sure, a conversation with a gentleman of distinction who told her he scarcely could reconcile her contradictory personality. "'Here you are, a successful artist,'" she relates, quoting him. "'in this studio containing three pianos including a baby grand, your walls adorned with paintings bearing your own signature, and yet you consort with'— not murderers of patriots as you might have expected him to say. No, what he said was, 'consort with organized laborers'!"

Then she tells how she began as a factory girl, hoping for something better. How she accumulated $300 toward a musical education. How, owing to unsanitary conditions in the factory, she fell ill of typhoid fever which depleted her savings so that she had to begin over again.

"'Do you suppose,' I asked this gentleman, 'that because I now earn $3 an hour I cannot have compassion upon those who work 15 hours,'—as some of the street car men in San Francisco were doing—'to earn that amount?'"

And she concludes, "And I tell you, friends, as soon as this trouble is cleared up I am going back to help finish the job of organizing those street car men."

What the President Accomplished in Paris

Peace Not Made Wholly in Accord With His Plans,

but He Saved Europe From Bolshevism, Says Simonds

Executive Found That He Must Make Large Concessions From His Idealism to Practical European Politics, but His Policy of Conciliation Was to Achieve as Nearly the Ideal as Possible.

Both He and Clemenceau Urged the Publication of the Treaty From the First, but Deferred to Lloyd George — Popularity Waned Greatly in France, but Later "France Will Be Glad He Came."

BUT if the President is being attacked by one wing for having failed, for having stayed in Europe instead of quitting and coming home, thus bringing about a general crash, it seems to me he deserves the approval in this respect of all thoughtful men who do not believe that even Bolshevism from one end of Europe to the other, with possible spilling over into America was a small price to pay for putting certain liberal or so-called liberal ideas into effect. If Mr. Wilson, when he found Clemenceau and Lloyd George could not follow his ideas without falling, had quit Europe, I firmly believe there would have been Bolshevistic explosions from the channel eastward, and, perhaps, in Britain. Germany might have won the war; France, Italy and Europe have been ruined.—FRANK H. SIMONDS.

By FRANK H. SIMONDS,

Author of "The Great War," and "They Shall Not Pass."

EVERY circumstances of the President's foreign mission has in recent months been subject to so much controversial comment that it is difficult in the extreme to discuss this visit without seeming to join in the controversy. Yet it is patent that there was a fact, that there were many facts, about the stay of Mr. Wilson in the French capital which can be described as they existed, without reference to the domestic political differences at home, just as misapprehensions exist at home which can be explained away without dealing with the main issues of partisan dispute.

For example, when I landed in New York, the newspapers were filled with the terms of the preliminaries of peace which had several weeks before been served upon the Germans and the Republican half of the Senate was criticising an apparently unsuccessful effort of the President to withhold these terms from it and from the American public. But the fact was that Mr. Wilson had tried frequently and earnestly to have these terms published. He had urged such publication from the very hour when they had been served upon the Germans, believing and declaring that the people of the world were entitled to know what the Germans knew as a matter of right.

Wilson Deferred to British Premier

Clemenceau had readily consented to the publication, remarking as an experienced journalist, that it was useless to try to suppress them and foolish to attempt to do something at once unpopular and impossible. Orlando had made no objection and had little concern, since Italy was not affected by the settlement with Germany. But Lloyd George had stoutly opposed the publication. Once when the British Premier had left Paris for a visit to the North, the three other members of the Big Four had reached an agreement to publish the terms, but on his return Lloyd George overbore all three.

What Lloyd George's objections to publicity were must be conjectured, but it is a fact that he was at all times and in all circumstances opposed to publicity. Certainly Mr. Wilson might have given the terms out, despite George's objection, but to do this would have been to create bad feeling, and the President, in this instance, as in so many others, yielded to a colleague.

But there is a much larger field of criticism of the President, which rests upon misapprehension. There seems to be a widespread belief in this country that the President by his incessant urgings of the League of Nations actually delayed the progress of settlement of terms upon the material problems. This is totally inexact. When Mr. Wilson reached Europe in December, he did not find France and Britain with programs arranged or with policies agreed upon. On the contrary, neither country had framed a program, jointly or separately. Britain, under Lloyd George's impulsion, had gone through the throes of an election, which had consumed all the energies and attention of its statesmen; France was wrestling with the grim problems of reorganization, temporary, incipient reorganization, after four years and a half of invasion and devastation.

Peace Not Delayed by Peace

More than this, the President did not bring his league of nations plan to Europe and force it upon a reluctant or hostile conference. Before he had even reached Europe Great Britain had decided to champion this great experiment and many British Ministers had taken their turn at devising actual machinery, for the President had not gone beyond the vaguest conception of a world league. If the French were frankly incredulous and openly critical, they were on the other hand totally unready with a program for the peace conference and their own plans were not disarranged by Mr. Wilson's purposes. At all times and under all circumstances the league of nations part of the business of the peace conference was in more advanced shape than the balance, nor was the attention of the conference diverted from actual peace making by this detail.

When the President reached Europe he received one of the most astonishing welcomes ever given to any public man in history, probably without precedent. He was hailed with enthusiasm by millions who saw in him the promise of a new age, without any clear notion in their own minds as to what this new and golden age was to be, but with a plain and poignant appreciation of what the world they lived in had seen in recent years. For a moment the President was the most popular man in Europe. On the whole, he lost nearly if not all of this popularity in the following months, but not all of the responsibility was his, although in the case of France, it was largely personal. And the decline in popularity of Lloyd George and Clemenceau was at least proportionate.

The fact was that the millions who welcomed the President with an unforgettable enthusiasm expected a miracle. They did not, as many now argue, look for a peace of conciliation with Germany which should be obtained by letting Germany off lightly and putting on their own shoulders the burden of the costs of the war and the German depredations. On the contrary, they hated the Germans with just as intense a hatred as ever and they were prepared to stand behind their respective Government in all demands, however extreme, which advantaged themselves. The mood of the masses was something quite different from what has been asserted. These masses had fought the war through, they were dog-tired with the agonies and sufferings, they hated this recent war, they hated all wars, they wanted peace and the millennium, but they did not want to pay the price, if any price could contribute to the end desired.

How He Lost French Popularity

All of this the President was to discover the moment he undertook to apply cold logic to the claims of the French, for example. Actually, he discovered it even before this, for within one month after he reached France he had lost French sympathy forever, by a single action. All France, every French man and French woman, demanded, expected, awaited a presidential visit to the devastated areas. France desired that Mr. Wilson should see her wounds, that he might better appraise German offendings and therefore deal with them more severely. Seeing what the Germans had done in all the industrial districts of the North, the French believed Mr. Wilson would the more readily accept French estimates of the bills Germany must pay.

On his part, however, the President promptly and firmly declined these invitations. He explained that he desired to act without passion, and that if he saw Flanders and Artois he might "see red" where it was essential to see without emotion. The refusal marked the immediate end of Mr. Wilson's popularity in France. The breach was final and irrevocable. Thereafter he disappeared from the thoughts of the masses of the people; henceforth he was no more than Orlando or Lloyd Geprge—a visiting statesman. When, in the course of the discussion the voice of America was raised to reduce French demands on the financial side, the disappointment flamed up in something like positive anger. "He has not seen our wounds, yet he would reduce our indemnities!" So the mass of French people, big and little, said.

Yet, since this is the case, it is plain to perceive how unjustly the President is criticised by those who denounce the terms of the treaty itself and assert that, had he chosen to insist upon more liberal terms the plain people of Europe would have supported him against their own statesmen. What happened when the President did appeal to the people of Italy over the heads of their diplomats is a final example of the inaccuracy of this assertion. But the French case is quite as illuminating. To preserve his mental balance—so his friends asserted—the President stayed away from the devastated districts, but this single course was as fatal to his popularity in France as was his Italian gesture destructive of his support in Italy.

Europe's Problems Puzzled Wilson

The truth which certain glib commentators do not seem to appreciate yet is that Mr. Wilson was never master of the Paris conference and exercised a steadily declining influence as the debate shifted from general questions, like the league of nations, to specific problems concerning Europeans directly. He came to Europe with a very clear idea in his own mind that by applying his 14 points quite literally and following them up with a league of nations he could put world peace on a solid foundation. He discovered very promptly that his 14 points were really no points at all, since they could be used effectively by both sides in any real controversy; he discovered that the millions who cheered the idea of permanent peace turned from him with cold hostility when he demanded of them sacrifices which to him seemed essential to obtaining such peace.

The fact, of course, is that Mr. Wilson, like every other American who went to the peace conference, discovered Europe as a thing totally different from that Europe he had imagined. He discovered that problems which have provoked centuries of war and remained insoluble from generation to generation cannot be solved by any merely academic formula. Take Fiume, for example, and you see an Italian town in a Slav land, necessary to the Jugo-Slavs, if they are to have adequate commercial outlet, an ineffaceable wound to Italian pride, if assigned to the Slavs, who would be certain to expel the Italians.

Mr. Wilson believed when he arrived in Europe that the people of all the allied countries would support him and his 14 points against their Governments. He discovered that the British would support the 14 points at the expense of the French, on occasion, and the French and British at the expense of the Italians, but even here he found such support strictly limited by a series of secret treaties, which bound all three countries to bargains which were not only in conflict with his 14 points, but with elemental justice.

There came a time, then, when Mr. Wilson had to choose between doing the best he could and coming home and leaving Europe to fight it out. He is gravely criticised by so-called liberals for electing to remain in Europe, but in the main this criticism is accompanied by the assertion that had he actually started for home the Governments which existed would have come crashing down and new Governments would have replaced them and done as he advised. Here again is the familiar argument that Mr. Wilson was in fact master of the situation, if he chose to use his power, but the fact is quite different.

If, for example, Mr. Wilson had quit France, because he was displeased with the French demands in the matter of the Saar, it is conceivable that Clemenceau might have fallen, not because of the opposition of the mass of the French people, to the Saar claims; quite the contrary. It would have fallen because in the difficult months of the winter and early spring all conditions in France were extremely bad and the people who suffered from the inescapable consequences of the war held the Ministry responsible. But if Clemenceau had fallen then there would have been a prompt drift to the radical left, Bolshevism all over Europe would have received an instant stimulus and heaven knows that in that time it needed no stimulus.

Clemenceau Had Troubles, Too

Conceivably, probably, Mr. Wilson could have wrecked the peace conference, had he chosen to quit it, as he threatened on one famous occasion publicly and on several occasions privately. But the result would almost inevitably have been chaos, which could not have failed to affect his own country. Moreover, and this point is capital, had the Governments with which he was dealing yielded to his demands, they would just as infallibly have fallen. Neither Lloyd George nor Clemenceau could face their public and confess that the Germans would escape paying up to the last imaginable limit, the costs of the war.

If the people of France, Italy and Britain were ready to criticise their Ministries for quarreling with the President, for letting him go home before the peace terms were agreed upon, they were quite prepared to turn their ministries out, if these ministries surrendered to the President in matters which the people held of supreme importance, and these matters were in the main financial. If the Socialists, who in France are not particularly important, continued to denounce Clemenceau, because he held out for the Saar and certain financial terms, the whole of the rest of France, politically speaking, criticised and denounced the French Prime Minister for yielding too much in the Saar and elsewhere, and press campaigns were openly waged against him on this ground.

Wreck the President might have had in all the difficult months, when Bolshevism was marching westward and internal misery and anarchy, growing out of the war, were supplying fresh tinder for Bolshevistic fires. But more than this he could not do. His liberal critics assert that he

JOHN I. BEGGS GIVES HIS VERSION OF THE THEFT OF THE REFERENDUM PETITIONS

Master of "Beggs' Isle" Interviewed at His Summer Home Says He Thinks Jackson "Pulled the Job" Expecting Big Reward.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., June 27.—Here, far from the perspiring straphangers' ignoble strife for seats, where fresh breezes sweep in from the clear, cool lakes and surrounding forests, a Post-Dispatch reporter sought out at his summer home John I. Beggs, long a dominating personality in the affairs of the United Railways Co., and discussed with him the testimony given last week before Special Master Lamm in St. Louis by George W. Baumhoff.

Approaching by way of the bridge that leads from the mainland to Beggs' Isle, he found the financier sauntering about the beautiful grounds, attired in cutaway coat and gray trousers, snipping with a pair of scissors at the rosebushes in front of the house.

"Come over here and sit down; it doesn't cost any more," Beggs said, leading the way to a marble bench of classic design under a tree. "This is my dissipation, you see," he remarked, taking in the grounds and the mansion with a sweep of his arm.

Baumhoff, it will be recalled, testified that at a midnight conference which he held with President Richard McCulloch of the United Railways, who is the son-in-law of Beggs, he advised McCulloch to call on Circuit Attorney McDaniel the next morning, and tell "all he knew" about United Railways affairs. McCulloch replied, according to Baumhoff, that before he did that he must see one man, and said, in response to a direct question, that the man was Beggs. Beggs came to town the next morning, talked to McCulloch and the latter never called on McDaniel.

"Did you discuss with McCulloch any conversation he had with Baumhoff, and did you give him any advice about calling on McDaniel?" the reporter asked Beggs.

"I did not," he answered. "He told me nothing about any conversation with Baumhoff, nor did we discuss the petition theft in any respect.

"I have talked very little about it to Mr. McCulloch. About a week before that I had cross-questioned him until I satisfied myself he knew nothing of the matter. The petitions, which probably were circulated by the Post-Dispatch, did not interest the United Railways, and the company had no object in wanting them stolen. The directors of the company had determined, before the theft, that the franchise was too burdensome to be considered, and had determined to reject it. Besides," he added, "the United Railways isn't into any dirty business like that. It doesn't believe in it.

"I am satisfied that Julius Ceasar Jackson, who had been associated with the company for several years, had had in his mind to pull off a job like that, then bring it to the company as something of great value, and ask a lot of money for it."

The reporter inquired if there had been anything in Jackson's previous conduct that caused Beggs to think he had such a scheme in mind. Beggs' feeling against the Post-Dispatch, already indicated by his reference to the petitions, exploded at the latest question.

"It's typical of a Post-Dispatch man to ask a thing like that," he shouted. "I never said anything suggesting that. Of course, if Jackson had given such an indication before, we would have discharged him." He continued:

"Nobody with any self-respect would have anything to do with your paper. Nobody reads it but the Bolsheviki.

It was suggested that if that was true there were an alarming number of Bolsheviki in St. Louis.

"Yes, you're right; there's a lot of them—unfortunately," Beggs said.

"Here's a fair sample of the way your paper distorts and garbles things," and he took from his pocket the Post-Dispatch of June 20, and pointed out the editorial under the caption, "Honest John Beggs."

The editorial, it will be remembered, commented on Beggs' testimony before Judge Lamm, in which he told of being a director in both the United Railways and the North American Co., at the time when the United Railways, a subsidiary of the North American, contracted to buy power from another subsidiary of the North American. The delicate position of Beggs as a selling director and purchasing director at the same time, was touched on, as was his testimony that when he sat on the board of the United Railways he acted in its interest, and when he sat on the board of the North American, he did his best for it, regardless of the fact that he was on both boards at once.

Concluding, the editorial said: "If Diogenes were alive, he would turn his lantern once on Mr. Beggs, extinguish the light, relinquish his arduous search, and retire to his tub. John I. Beggs is an honest man—a superman in that rugged virtue."

The reporter asked Beggs if, then, it was not true that he was on the two boards when the power contract was made.

"I won't answer a fool question like that," he said, his voice rising. "That article is written in a devilish vein, and you know it." A little later, however, he said:

"Yes, I did help make that power contract, and I'm proud of it. It was the best contract ever made by a public utility corporation in the United States." That was the end of the discussion of United Railways affairs.

For the next hour Beggs took the reporter through the grounds, describing some of the hundreds of rare flowers and shrubs, the care of which, he said, occupies the attention of six landscape gardeners.

The island, which is owned by Beggs and has no other buildings on it except the large summer home and auxiliary structures, is in Lac la Belle, one of the most picturesque lakes in this region of many and beautiful bodies of water.

In the front yard is a mound of the type found near St. Louis, and Beggs repeated the legend that Chief Oconomowoc, chief of the tribe after which this town is named, was buried there.

Here Beggs finds relief, he said, from the worries and cares that perplex the mind of a man of large affairs. He is able to forget the responsibility of rehabilitating street car systems and power companies in an atmosphere laden with the fragrance of Holland roses, grafted, he explained, on French stalks.

A plant in which he showed particular pride was the Egyptian lotus. The reporter asked if it was indigenous to the vicinity.

"It is imported from Egypt," Beggs replied.

He led the way over rustic bridges, many of them spanning artificial canals dug, Beggs said, for the sole purpose of making it possible to erect bridges over them. He pointed out his model English garden, with white pergolas, and his bog garden with lilly pads and bullfrogs.

He led the way past the gate lodge, where a bronze statue represents a maid holding out a tray to receive visitors' cards, and took the reporter near enough to enjoy the aroma of the Colorado spruce, which, even though transplanted, appeared to thrive.

The steep sides of the island, sloping down to the level band of shore which circles Beggs' Isle, which, in shape, is very like a doughboy's shrapnel helmet, afford opportunities for a number of rockberies, made of stones artistically arranged, and covered with flowers and vines, giving the effect of uncurbed profusion.

"Takes considerable care to get that effect," Beggs observed dryly. "All those plants have to be taken up and put in the greenhouses dur-

LETTERS FROM THE PEOPLE.

Wages and High Prices.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch

During the war, by a strange paradox, due principally to the value of labor unions, some workers have been receiving abnormal incomes, while others have not been able to earn a dollar more, and in some cases they have been earning less. They have been in the hands of the profiteers, and though striving by the greatest kinds of economies to adapt themselves to these conditions, they have been growing poorer each day, though at all times employed, because they were not earning enough to absorb these tremendous high prices.

With the return of great prosperity in many lines, however, does it represent Bolshevism for these faithful employes to feel that they deserve to participate in the enlarged profits of their employers, which in many cases are decidedly large, or shall they continue to struggle along practically unable to meet their obligations, hoping against hope until they reach a point that their credit is utterly destroyed and they are confronted with great desperation?

I am writing this letter for the good of all, but I am appealing distinctly for those who are unable to make their own appeals.

The writer at the present time is riding on the Come-Back special, and therefore his utterances must not be construed as emanating from a selfish heart, but he does want to say in a most incisive manner that the employer who does not sympathize with his employes under the present conditions and not do his utmost to strive to ameliorate their embarrassments is a narrow, unprogressive citizen, and he does not deserve prosperity.

The grandest sentiment in this world at all times is the consideration of others, and especially so of those less fortunate than ourselves. Yours for the world's happiness. HUMANITY.

A Convert to Prohibition.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

As I have noticed a number of letters about prohibition, I thought I would like to give my opinion. Am a drinking man myself, and guess I have drank as much, if not more, than a great many of them.

Now I never paid much attention to the talk of prohibition until last fall, when President Wilson gave out his proclamation prohibiting the making of beer after Dec. 1 and the selling of it after July 1. Then I began to think and study. And the more I thought the better I thought of it and I think now it would be the best thing that ever happened. I have had my eyes opened.

There isn't a week passes but what I meet men who have been out working on some railroad or some other job. He comes in, gets himself a pair of pantaloons or perhaps a whole suit of clothes or shoes. Then to the saloon and drink, and they keep this up until their money is gone, and then next day you will meet them on the street peddling the clothes which they bought when they came in off the job for more drink or a bite to eat. Then ship out again on another job. Now, I have a friend who has been doing this stunt all winter, but instead of selling his clothes he puts them in a hockshop; then when he comes in off the job he gets them out, plus interest, then laughs and tells what a time he had.

I think drink is the root of all evil, and the sooner we have prohibition the better. A LOVER OF IT.

Jefferson's Letter on Wine.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

Senator Elihu Root refers to a letter of Thomas Jefferson on the use of wine; the following is that part of President Jefferson's letter. Beer was not known in this country at that time. I take it the same line of reasoning will apply to the manufacture and sale of beer.

"On the tax on wine.

"To M. de Neuville. Monticello, Dec. 13, 1818.

"I rejoice, as a moralist, at the prospect of a reduction of the duties on wine by our national legislature. It is an error to view a tax on that liquor as merely a tax on the rich. It is a prohibition of its use to the middling class of our citizens, and a condemnation of them to the poison of whisky, which is desolating their houses. No nation is drunken where wine is cheap; and none sober, where the dearness of wine substitutes ardent spirits as the common beverage. It is, in truth, the only antidote to the bane of whisky."

An Ant Hill.

To the Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

The world appears to be a huge ant hill, now disturbed with humans playing the title role. Will they get into safer quarters (free from accident or destruction), or will they keep on in the same blundering way that ants have followed for myriads of years?

THE TASK OF PEACE.

Durable peace to nations of good will.

This is the meaning of the peace covenant which is the foundation of the treaty signed yesterday at Versailles, if it means anything.

The peace covenant will mean nothing—it will be a scrap of paper—unless it is earnestly supported by the peoples who are pledged by their representatives to promote the great ends of justice, liberty and permanent peace through co-operation and arbitration.

The hope of peace with justice, which is the only sure ground of peace, rests upon the League of Nations.

Let us admit frankly that the treaty with Germany does not realize all the aims and ideals defined by President Wilson and accepted by the allies. It is disappointing. It contains the seeds of war which would rapidly sprout into conflicts of hatred, jealousy, greed and revenge if it stood alone. The 14 points have been disregarded in some things done and some things undone. The right of self-determination has not been respected in all cases. All wrongs have not been righted and the germs of annexation are planted in the Saar Valley, Silesia and parts of Prussia. They are war germs. The terms laid upon Germany, although they may be deserved in view of the devastation and horror she has wrought, may prove to be intolerable.

In judging the failures of the treaty we must take into consideration the conditions under which it was made. We must consider the bitter hatreds engendered, the old habits of thought among the peoples most affected, their long-cherished greeds and their long slavery to fear. We must consider the old methods of diplomacy which have held sway for centuries and which cannot be eradicated at once. It was not practical in a peace conference held after such a war of horror and destruction to get the calm judgment and restraining wisdom needed to make a peace that would embrace all the aims and ideals that took place in the fervid heat of a desperate war for life and liberty. Victory was too sweet after vast sacrifices of blood and treasure to be thrust aside easily.

On the other hand, there are triumphs of right and reason in the treaty that are so significant and pregnant of advances in civilization that they far outweigh its faults. It marks a revolution in the minds of men with regard to international relationships, and the beginning of an evolution upward in national ethics. Militarism is crushed, the old diplomacy of secrecy, cunning and deceit is set aside for open dealings and understandings. Liberty is recognized as the right of peoples and national banditry is condemned. The nations signing the treaty declare their intention to deal fairly and pledge themselves to substitute right for might, law for the sword, justice for greed and to strive to prevent aggression and war.

The League of Nations is the bulwark of justice and peace. If it is worked out successfully by the earnest co-operation of the nations, mankind will enter upon a new and better era. The faults of the treaty may be rectified. The vanquished may hopefully appeal to it for justice, for the wrongs that have crept into the peace terms.

The peace covenant is an experiment, but a noble experiment, based upon sound principles, which appeal to the moral sense of mankind and which offer solid ground for the building of the federation of nations which embodies and realizes the aspirations of men since the dawn of civilization. It is based upon principles which have proved sound and enduring in the American union. It offers all peoples the blessings we have enjoyed. It sets a peace guard on the ramparts of the world.

The success of this great experiment in higher human culture and civilization depends wholly upon the peoples who are joined together in common aims under its constitution. The League of Nations in itself contains no magic which assures automatic success. It will not work of itself. It must be nurtured and cherished. It must have the earnest support of all men who love justice and liberty and who seek peace. It can survive and thrive only through the working of those moral forces upon which all civilization depends—the forces of moral judgment and sound public opinion, which are weightier than material forces.

The signing of the peace treaty is the beginning, therefore, of the greatest task for human welfare that men have consciously and deliberately undertaken. The world looks to America for leadership in this task. As a people which has succeeded in the greatest experiment in democracy the world has known, strong, rich, enlightened, the leadership belongs to us. If we do not lead, who will? Who can?

If we turn aside from the path, if we reject the glorious undertaking, the hopes of men will be blasted, the light of peace which today bathes the world in joy and hope will fade into darkness.

BILLIONS IN WHEAT.

St. Louis' quota for the Kansas wheat fields this year, where the harvesting is now under way, is 12,000 hands. The Chamber of Commerce, which, at the request of the Department of Agriculture, is undertaking to supply this man power, has been entraining regiments of laborers for the Kansas sector every day the past week. The mobilization is completed, or nearly so.

According to earlier forecasts, Kansas will smash all records this year with 200,000,000 bushels. And Kansas' production is only one chapter, albeit a big one, in the national wheat story. In all of the wheat states it is a bumper year. The Department of Agriculture has estimated the total crop of winter and spring wheat at 1,236,000,000 bushels. This exceeds our biggest pre-war year record by more than 700,000,000 bushels and substantially tops the billion-bushel year of 1915.

It is the judgment of grain experts that the American crop will just about meet Europe's demands. In normal times the world requires some 600,000,000 bushels of exportable wheat. Ordinarily Russia and the Balkan States supplied something more than one-third of that requirement. But the Russian-Balkan source of supply is now sealed and our immense crop will enable us to take care of that deficit, though it is possible some economy of consumption may have to be practiced.

Financially our wheat crop this year gallops into new figures. At $2.26 a bushel the farmer, statistically, will receive more than twice what he usually gets; actually the farmer will realize more than three times the ordinary return. In what may be described as dollar-a-bushel years more than 70 per cent of the wheat is sold by the farmer at from 65 to 75 cents a bushel. The profits in wheat before the war were made by the speculators and the millers, not by the farmers. This was especially true of bumper-crop years.

But this year it is a bumper crop at a super-bumper price, which the farmer will collect. In terms of money, our wheat crop will mean something like $200,000,000,000.

Literally as well as rhetorically the binders are singing a golden song in America's wheat belt.

RACIAL FRIENDSHIP.

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

IT was good, sensible advice which Col. Charles Young of Camp Grant, Illinois—a negro officer—gave to people of his own race at the Academy of Music several evenings ago.

First he asked how many of his auditors believed that on the whole the white people wanted and meant to do the right thing by the black man. For all the provocation to believe the contrary, most of those present instantly raised their hands. Then he said: "Love and hate are boomerangs, and if you would have the white man love you and be courteous toward you, it is time that the colored people desisted in their hatred, which seems to be growing more prevalent."

That is the way for the friends of either race to talk. Any one who seeks to engender strife instead of to smooth away the causes of friction is a foe to society. The earth belongs to all men, and industrial opportunity should be open to those who can qualify for employment, without regard to the color line. The race in half a century of political freedom and through several centuries of industrial and social discrimination has hopefully persevered, and except when roused by artificial incitements it has been gentle and patient, kindly and humorous and long-suffering. There are bad and violent black men, and there are white men of the same kind. Neither race has the monopoly of viciousness or of virtue. But no matter what their color, men were set on earth to help and not to hinder one another. He who preaches that any man has the right to take by force what is another's is an anarchist, whether his doctrine be overt or covert. It is time to single out and to punish those who seek to inflame one portion of humanity against another; and against these incendiary doctrines there are to be set such wise and temperate counsels as those of Col. Young.

THE COFFEE BOOST.

From the Boston Post.

PEOPLE are asking why the price of coffee has gone sky-rocketing of late—and with reason. They cannot understand the cause of such rapid advances after the war was practically over, while during the long contest there was little, if any, increase.

One trouble with the coffee situation was pointed out by Capt. Nasciemento of the Brazilian liner Uberaba that arrived in New York the other day with 30,000 bags of the cheering commodity on board. He declared absurd the report that coffee was going to be a dollar a pound. He said his country had raised more coffee than ever before, and that it was lying in bags on the docks going to waste for want of steamships to take it away. The best grades of coffee could be bought in Rio at 10 cents a pound and two pounds for a quarter. He advised Americans to send steamships down to Brazil and grab the coffee.

Some intimation by the Republican leaders in the Senate of what their course in the immediate future is to be would be appreciated by the country. Are they going to upset the peace signed by everybody at Paris on yesterday? Are they going to suffer it to stand pretty much as it is, going only so far as to divide the peace treaty from the league of nations covenant and giving the world more time in which to think the latter over? One cannot say. There is no word from Lodge. There is nothing from Knox. Borah is silent. One would imagine that possibly these gentlemen have realized defeat; but that, of course, is preposterous. The Senate would never resign itself to defeat. Besides, it is immensely more powerful than the rest of the world. Versailles is a bauble the Senate can crush in its hand as one crumples a withered flower. Speak, thou mighty ones! Is it peace or not? Have we come the long way, the bitter way, to the end—or is this merely where the Titans of earth take it over to make of it what they will? Our fate, great sirs—what is it to be?

China is beginning to have labor troubles, and they are picturesque. The following paragraph is from a story in the Canton Times of the demonstration following the discharge of a foreman in a railroad workshop:

"Upon the dismissal of Mr. Pang, his men gave him a big send-off, presenting him with a large piece of glassware and following him to his home, firing crackers all the way."

The humor of this saloon sign, which is as old as prohibition, is revived by the imminence of the end of the month:

The First of July Will Be the Last of August.

Sign hunters who have been somewhat clamorous for us to print it must recall that it is a very old joke and one incapable of too much exercise this hot weather. Nevertheless, its piquance increases, so it does very well.

The problem of what to do with signs we have used and which many earnest sign hunters continue sending in to us is sometimes, as in this case, a veritable poser. However, this particular sign has not given us half the trouble some others have. The leading trouble maker is easily this one on Market street, St. Louis:

NEWS FROM THE HOT SANDS.

No stranger story of prohibition has come off the desert than this one from Fleming, Kan.: Some time ago a barrel of whisky was sent by express to Fleming from a point in Missouri. The contents of the barrel were such that the purchaser did not come out of hiding to call for it. Meanwhile the barrel was kept in the express room at the Missouri Pacific station. This room is above ground at the rear a distance of some four or five feet. After some weeks the express company decided to bring the barrel back to Missouri, and the agent went in to bring it out. Laying hand upon it, he gave a hard pull. To his surprise, the barrel was empty. He fell over backward with it on top of him. The wets of Fleming had surveyed the situation carefully enough to bore through the floor into the barrel and drain the whisky out in tubs and buckets. Pretty fine calculation. Eh! What? If they would work like that at the town we would all have heard of Fleming before.

Some time ago the Missouri Pacific closed its freight office at a town just inside the Missouri line on our Kansas front. The company did this only after a remarkable series of proofs that Kansas cares for well water alone. Four-fifths of the freight to this point was liquor. For 30 nights handrunning prior to the closing of the freight office the station was robbed of all the liquor in it. On one occasion the thieves slugged a watchman. The company was responsible for the freight, and it was losing money. So it paid its losses and canceled the freight station. No doubt a howl went up over in Kansas. It was as if an oasis had gone dry in the Sahara.

FIDDLER'S MAGIC.

THE violinist, his bow, draws as it were a slender knife
Of tempered steel; the fiddle strings stay whole,
But there appears a crevice out of which Come living light and color. And if skill
He hath to put his soul into his effort
To open to the infinite a door,
There come out spirits of the vasty deep,
Each clad in naked beauty, and a-dance
With sheerest joy, or lagged with weight of woe.
But others calmly strong or strongly calm.
And where they enter, there they rest and heal.

U. S. Is Without an Air Service Squadron, Senate Investigators Are Told

Gen. Mitchell, Head of War Department Aviation, Says None Exists, Even on Paper, Explaining Causes and Requirements.

BY DAVID LAWRENCE,
A Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Testimony before the Senate Military Affairs Committee on the aircraft situation in the United States today has just become available and it shows that while America has plenty of equipment left over from the European war, service squadrons have not yet been organized either for defense on the Mexican border or elsewhere.

The Senate committee, which is presided over by Senator Wadsworth of New York, Republican, sought enlightenment from several aviation officials among them Brigadier-General William Mitchell, who is in charge of aviation operations in the War Department today. He had the distinction of commanding the whole American aviation service in the St. Mihiel drive. It was the biggest aerial concentration on the western front, no less than 1500 planes being sent into action.

What Mitchell says is of importance because it represents an inventory of aviation conditions in the United States today by the highest flying officer of the American expeditionary forces. At the outset, Gen. Mitchell explains why today's state of affairs is to some extent the result of unavoidable policy during the war.

Situation During the War.

"The United States," he said, "was used during the war as a reservoir for personnel and material to be sent to Europe—everything here was designed with a view to instructing personnel, and with a view to producing material of various kinds to send to Europe so when I came back here, and when Gen. Menoher came back, there were no service squadrons existing in this country, nor were there any service airplanes, so as things stand we have nothing ready to go to war with."

"As a matter of fact, what really have we got?" inquired Senator New of Indiana.

"We have training equipment, Senator, training equipment," was the reply.

"General, where would you be today if you were called upon to put ships into service?" asked Wadsworth.

"We cannot put any in service, because we have not got the organization nor the machines to put them into service on a basis fit to cope with a nation equipped with a good air service."

"Haven't you some aero squadrons?"

"No, sir; we have not."

"None on paper?"

"No service units. We are just going ahead and try to get men and material to train and organize them."

"Gen. March testified that he had an aero squadron, at least on paper," said Senator Shepard of Texas.

"The one on paper is a project—we have no service squadron."

"You mean, I suppose, General, the outline?" remarked Senator Sheppard and then Senator New interrupted with the comment that "a paper squadron would not be very formidable."

About 5000 New Enlistments.

"Here is the thing," continued Gen. Mitchell by way of explanation, "the army is being demobilized, and the great question is to get back on a voluntary basis. We have now about 5000 men who have enlisted for the new army. These men have to be assigned and trained."

"We were getting a good air service developed during the war," said Senator Thomas of Colorado.

"The material is being saved," explained Gen. Mitchell. "The only thing we have in this country in the way of aeroplanes is the De Haviland plane with the Liberty motor. Now for work in this country and in Mexico we can use it until we get something better."

"It is desirable to get something better?"

"Yes, sir; just as soon as we can get it."

"Now other branches of the army," insisted Wadsworth, "have managed to survive the process of demobilization, such as the infantry regiments, artillery regiments, cavalry regiments—why could you not have managed the same way with the airplane squadrons?"

"In the first place, Senator," replied Mitchell, "when you bring them back to the United States"——

"We have no organization then," interrupted New.

"The necessities for demobilization," was the answer, "were so great that these men had to be gotten rid of. That is to say, the personnel, before new ones were organized. That is the only way we can account for it. This question came up before I came back, but every effort is now being made to get the personnel and organize them according to the project which has been submitted."

In the Event of a Call.

"What would you do," asked Wadsworth, "if you got an order to put a squadron in the service?"

"If it was for the Mexican service, we would go to the schools that are down in that neighborhood and take anything we could get—it would be something similar to what the squadron was that was sent there before."

"Do you mean to say, we have not so far as possessing means of fighting in the air—that that is all we could do?"

"The personnel which has been trained as a result of this war is largely scattered throughout the country. We have a wonderful basis of personnel returning from Europe, but they had to go home. The great majority of them would not stay in the service because it looked like a hopeless future for them, as very little encouragement for an air service of any importance in the near future was held out."

Mitchell discussed in a very interesting way incidentally the use of aeroplanes to protect the United States against attack by hostile warships.

Conditions of Coast Defense.

"I have been investigating the work along the coast from the standpoint of coast defense. We can organize aviation to be used against an attacking navy, in combination with our land defenses, so that their chance of either demolishing our forts or enabling a force to land will be practically out of the question. They cannot conceal themselves, are very easy to attack, and, of course, comparatively slow of speed. Take, for instance, the areas which have to be defended on the east coast—the Boston area, the New York area, Delaware area and Chesapeake Bay area. We can concentrate aircraft in any one of these localities from any place on the Atlantic Seaboard in this area in 30 hours if we have an organization fit for service.

"I believe today if you equip an air service adequately and combine it with your land forces, in case of an attack against the coast by a hostile navy convoying an army, or a navy alone, that you will get more out of it from the air service than you will from anything else in proportion to the financial and personnel investment made. They cannot get away from you. With any kind of visibility you can see them for miles. I believe that even in a heavy fog, with a dirigible and everything quiet on the dirigible you can hear them. You can always manage a dirigible in any kind of weather outside of a hurricane. Your directional wireless locates you every time. The combination of heavier than air craft and lighter than air craft working together tactically is a very difficult thing to get around."

Mitchell pointed out that while some excellent equipment was available, it was scattered in all parts of the United States.

Size of Country a Factor.

"In France," he declared, "you can send in an automobile and get things from one end of the country to another, but in a country as large as this they should be concentrated at convenient points. But with hundreds of miles separating the stations, it is almost impossible to keep any liaison. This country, during the war, was used to send things to Europe where they were brought together or organized into units for use. They sent machine shop trucks from one place, guns from another, airplanes from another, motors from another, to France. Now we must get all these things under one division. In other words we should aim to get tactical units, whereas we have instruction units."

"What are you going to do with all those De Havilands?' asked Senator Sutherland of West Virginia.

"I think, replied Mitchell, "they can be used for school purposes and the purposes along the Mexican border.'

"If they are dangerous, should they be used?"

"The principal trouble was as a service plane in Europe. The Liberty motor is a good motor at a low altitude, but the plane was especially bad on account of its gas tank not being protected from fire caused by bullets, and the fact that the pilot and observer are too far apart. For those reasons it was not a good ship. It was not a good day bombardment ship nor a good observation plane. It was an old type, and none of us liked it."

Squadrons on Armistice Day.

"Well, did you send any over the front at all?" asked Senator Thomas of Colorado.

"Yes, we had 11 squadrons the day the armistice was signed. We worked with them all the time."

"You had 11 squadrons?"

"Yes, we had 196 ships in those 11 squadrons on the day of the armistice."

"What was the biggest aerial concentration in any operation of the war?"

"The largest concentration was in the St. Mihiel operation. That was the biggest air concentration ever had on the western front, about 1500 ships."

"That was under your command?"

"Yes, sir."

"What percentage was American?"

"We had about 550 ships there."

"American?"

"Yes, manned by Americans."

"Did you lose heavily in that attack?"

"No, but later we lost heavily in the Argonne. We were just beginning to get our system going well when the armistice was signed. What we need is a system."

Mitchell concluded with a plea for an independent air service, dependent neither on the army nor navy for supplies, but organized as a unit for national defense. America has excellent material, but today it is disorganized and scattered. That is why Congress today is more than ever responsible for the future of aviation.

Events in the Social World

June Weddings Continue to Be the Chief Interest of the Social Set, Many Marriages Being Celebrated Without Previous Announcement -- Wednesday the Favorite Day for Numerous Brides.

THE chorus of June wedding bells promises to fairly engulf the demands of other society events for attention in St. Louis. Never, perhaps has the interest of St. Louisans been attracted by the marriage of so many persons who have been active participants in social affairs.

In addition to the almost unprecedented number of weddings that had been announced, the last week has seen a number of which no previous announcement had been made.

To the unquestioned preference of June as a time for tying the golden knot has been added the observance of the old adage, "Wednesday for luck," that day having held a striking advantage over the other six in the way of popularity with those who wed.

SEWING SCHOOL TO BE OPENED FOR AN AMERICANIZATION CLASS

Italian Women of St. Embrose Parish Meeting Favor It and Ask Permission to Bring Daughters.

The Women's Council of St. Louis, which is conducting an Americanization class among Italian women, meeting every Wednesday night in St. Embrose parish school, corner of Wilson and Cooper streets, now will open a sewing school for the same women on a second evening of the week.

The decision to open the school was brought about by the frequent requests of the women themselves for such instruction. A vote was taken to determine whether a part of the night devoted to study of language and customs be given over to sewing or whether sewing should be taken up on a separate night. The decision for the separate night was unanimous and virtually all asked permission to bring their daughters. The instruction will be under the direction of Mrs. A. Storie of 5853 Enright avenue.

Recently members of the class in Americanization were taken to a grocery store and there taught how to ask for food and deal with an American grocer. On another occasion they were given instruction in table etiquette by seating themselves about a table and proceeding as if a meal was in progress.

By the Associated Press.

WHERE ARE THEY?

One day this week a business man said to the manager of RUBICAM'S Employment Department, "Can you send me several Rubicam stenographers who are out of employment?" She answered, "There are no such persons. I have been searching for them for weeks." Where are they?

For a number of years, Rubicam's Employment records have shown an average of 50 calls monthly that have remained unfilled, on account of the demand exceeding the supply. 905 position calls have been received from January 1 to June 28.

Rubicam Business School needs a greater number of earnest, wide-awake young people to take advantage (1) of the thorough business training that is offered, (2) of the splendid business opportunity that awaits the Rubicam graduate, and (3) to carry on indefinitely into the business offices throughout the land the Rubicam ideals of good work, honest dealings, and high moral standards.

ST. LOUIS KNITTERS MAKE WAR RECORD

33,000 Women and Children Turn Out 429,585 Articles for Fighting Men.

The St. Louis Chapter, American Red Cross knitting shop, which was opened Sept. 17, 1919, on the southwest corner of Ninth and Olive streets, was formally closed yesterday, the knitting program of the local Red Cross chapter having been completed. Many knitted garments are still to be returned, however, and these will be accepted at the chapter headquarters, 1012 Frisco Building.

Since the opening of the shop more than 33,000 women and children have knitted for the local Red Cross chapter, and the result has been the turning out of more than 429,585 knitted articles. Approximately 135,000 pounds of yarn has been consumed in making these articles.

Miss F. A. Lynes has been in charge of the shop since its opening, and at the closing yesterday declared that the women of St. Louis, St. Louis County and East St. Louis had responded nobly to the call for volunteer knitters and have done their work well. The co-operation of the various public institutions of the city, the schools, the teachers and the children were especially commended by Miss Lynes.

Having completed her work with the Red Cross, Miss Lynes will depart Sept. 1 for Demorest, Ga., where she will become dean of women at Piedmont College.

WASHINGTON OFFICE JOBS OPEN

Government Calls for Stenographers, Bookkeepers and Typists.

The Government has sent out an urgent call for stenographers, bookkeepers and typists to fill positions at Washington. The openings are exceptionally good and the pay high as compared with salaries in private business. The usual pay to start for stenographers, typists and bookkeepers is $1200, $1100 and $1100, respectively. The higher positions as a rule are filled from the lower ranks by promotion, thus giving anyone who is faithful an equal chance for promotion.

The Government maintains a list of available rooms in private houses for its employes and also has a limited number of rooms in houses under its own supervision. Anyone interested may obtain information by applying to the local board of Civil Service Examiners at the Custom House.

WHAT PRESIDENT ACCOMPLISHED WHILE IN PARIS

might have drawn strength from the radicals of Europe, but they do not recognize, as he had to, that such strength was slight and that the men with whom he was debating terms would be turned out of office if they conceded all or most of what he was asking them to concede. It was always possible for Woodrow Wilson to become the Bolshevist leader in Europe. He had only to break with Lloyd George and with Clemenceau to replace Lenin and Trotsky and unquestionably Bolshevism would have gained instead of declining, in the following months.

"Europe Is Europe, Not America."

But the idea that Lloyd George, Orlando or Clemenceau could have accepted Mr. Wilson's leadership and permitted him to settle the European and Asiatic problems in accordance with his own personal conceptions rests upon the major fallacy that the mass of the people of the countries these men represented were themselves prepared to accept Mr. Wilson's ideas. Had this been the case all would have been simple. But as Flume, the question of reparations, the everlasting puzzle of Ireland, if you please, well demonstrated, the majority of the people were not willing and their Ministers, having to choose between losing the majority or the minority, chose to stand with the majority.

Mr. Wilson's gravest mistake, in my judgment, lay in his original misapprehension of the real facts. He thought, he believed, that there would be a peace of conciliation, he believed the mass of the plain people of the world were prepared to make any sacrifice to bring this about and he believed that the Fourteen Points and the league of nations would take care of everything. Not only did he believe it, but he proclaimed the fact and many people who heard him also believed it. Then, when it became perfectly clear that Europe was still Europe and that no American solution, based largely on a mixture of sublime faith and appalling unfamiliarity with the underlying facts, could or would be permitted to solve anything, he was attacked on all sides by those who had accepted his original statements.

There Is Hope in the League.

The idea that such complicated questions as those presented by the mixture of populations in Central and Eastern Europe can be so settled as not to inspire several of the races who feel themselves wronged, with a determination to fight again, is patently preposterous and events are proving it to be such. Mr. Bonar Law said in the House of Commons the other day that not less than 20 wars were going on in Europe at the moment. The Serbs and the Italians, the Hungarians and the Rumanians, the Poles and the Germans will never jointly accept any settlement of their boundaries, and the league of nations cannot prevent conflicts which the victorious alliance against Germany is at this moment unable to halt, and behind all else lies the colossal problem of Russia, with an infinite number of apprehensions to be felt.

Mr. Wilson encouraged the idea that he could go to Europe and solve this problem, settle all these questions. He undoubtedly believed this, and many of his followers believed it also. Once in Europe, he found that all he could possibly accomplish was to get the best possible organization of the league of nations and hope that out of it would develop a method for avoiding wars. Conceivably he is wrong again, in believing the league of nations can accomplish this; conceivably he is right; this is a matter for years of controversy, but since he encouraged the idea that the insoluble could be solved, he is now attacked by those who, not having had his experience, still believe in the efficacy of his principles, and that had they been applied, these same principles would have solved everything.

But if the President is being attacked by one wing for having failed, for having stayed in Europe instead of quitting and coming home, thus bringing about a general crash, it seems to me he deserves the approval in this respect of all thoughtful men and women who do not believe that even Bolshevism from one end of Europe to the other with possible spilling over into America was a small price to pay for putting certain liberal or so-called liberal ideas into effect. If Mr. Wilson, when he found Clemenceau and Lloyd George could not follow his ideas without failing, had quit Europe, I firmly believe that there would have been Bolshevistic explosions from the channel eastward and perhaps in Britain, Germany might yet have won the war; France, Italy, Europe have been ruined.

Facing the dilemma, the President stayed and made such fight as he could for his program. Clemenceau told a labor delegation just before I left Paris that he did not believe anyone could have made a better fight and—odd circumstance—Clemenceau who began by sneering openly at the President has ended by feeling for him a considerable measure of respect and liking. I have heard more than one Frenchman of real weight say that in the end France would be glad that the President had come to the peace conference, because his had been a usefully moderating influence.

And this raises the last point, with which I shall deal here. Was it wise for the President to go to Paris? Should he have stayed away? The Paris view, the view of all Americans in Paris on this question was I think unanimous. With all the great and little nations of the alliance represented by their executives, by their Prime Ministers, how could the United States have been represented except by the President? We might have made a separate peace, we might have chosen to let Europe make its terms, since we had no demands of our own to make and then have accepted them; perhaps it would have been wiser, but if we chose to go to Paris at all, we had to go represented by the officer of the country who ranked with the representatives of the other great and small Powers of the world.

Criticise Mr. Wilson as one may, it is still necessary to recognize that at a task, which to be sure was self-chosen, he worked with an energy and fidelity beyond question. He was at it night and day. His was, in a sense a pathetic figure. Popularity, such as had come to him in the first hours of his stay, disappeared; he was remote, he had not the capacity for making friends and he had an infinite capacity for being misunderstood. Paris by turns laughed at him and passionately criticised him, misinterpreting his adhesion to academic notions as in fact actual championship of Germany.

Little by little most of what he had hoped for slipped away. He saw Europe as it was, not as he had imagined it. The little group in Crillon Hotel passed in part from open sycophancy to equally open criticism; he found the politicians, whose fervor for his ideals, as expressed in his public statements, had convinced him of their faith in them, suddenly ranged against him in disputes on which no two men could honestly differ as a matter of principle. In such political adventures he was no match for Lloyd George, and could neither understand nor follow the agility with which the British Prime Minister leaped from one side of a question to the other, as the direction of British public opinion seemed to change.

In the end, the treaty terms which were made amounted to a recognition of the reasonable and the rejection of the extreme claims of all the nations at war with Germany, so far as Germany was concerned. Had the President had his way they would have been milder, had he not been

Effective July 1, 1919

It has become imperative to advance prices on Nemo Corsets in accordance with the following Price List, because of the constant increase in the cost of materials and labor.

Adhering to our established policy never to deteriorate the high standard of Nemo quality, and at the same time to keep them within reach of the popular demand, we have tried to adjust prices accordingly,

By comparison, you will find that the intrinsic value represented in Nemo Corsets is far above that of any other make, while the invaluable Hygienic-Style-Service, for which they have become famous, is still given entirely free of charge.

WHAT PRESIDENT ACCOMPLISHED WHILE IN PARIS

at the peace conference I am certain they would have been more severe. But they were European terms pure and simple as they were always bound to be. The President had not dominated the conference. He could not dominate it. He had found himself in the presence of an unyielding opposition when he threatened to go home, if his associates did not yield. He then declined the opportunity to turn the world over to Bolshevism because he could not have his own way, and for this he is now being assailed by American parlor Bolshevism, which begins and ends with the assertion that Mr. Wilson could have had his own way, and that he is to be blamed, therefore, for not producing that millennium. To be sure he more or less promised this thing but it was impossible at all times for reasons which are themselves the explanation of a thousand years and more of European, and for that matter human, history.

JOHN I. BEGGS GIVES VERSION OF REFERENDUM PETITIONS

ing the winter, then set out again in the spring."

Openings between trees around the edge of the plateau gave the effect of framed landscapes, showing beautiful vistas of lake, glinting under the rays of the setting sun, which fell softly on the roofs and spires of the town, a mile distant, and on the other side of the water. Beggs took the romance out of that, too.

"I had those vistas cut there," he said. "When there weren't any trees to frame the openings, I planted them."

In response to a remark he exclaimed: "Expense! I should say I have gone to expense! It's my dissipation, I tell you. It's what I want, and I can afford to have it, so I got it."

The reporter remarked that if Beggs only had a drawbridge between the island and the mainland, he would have a pretty fair reproduction of a feudal castle.

"The difference between the feudal lord and me is that I don't want to keep people out," he said. "I like to have them come. It does them good. The great pity about the place is that more people cannot enjoy its beauty."

John I. Beggs, master of Beggs' Isle, is a director and holder of 12,000 shares of stock in the North American Co., of the par value of $1,200,000, not to mention 3600 shares of United Railways stock and stock in other public utility corporations.

According to his testimony last week he has been connected for 40 years with public utility enterprises, mostly street car, light and power companies, during which time he has amassed what is reputed to be a large fortune. In his testimony he said he had tried to retire more than once, but had been called out to rehabilitate concerns in financial difficulties.

As a former director of the United Railways, and the father-in-law of President McCulloch, he has been credited with great influence in dictating the policies of the company, particularly with regard to its finances. He told Judge Lamm it was the only corporation that ever went bankrupt while he was connected with it.

Not only does the North American Co., in which Beggs has held stock for more than 20 years, control the United Railways, but it owns the Union Electric Light and Power Co., and formerly controlled the Laclede Gas Light Co. Beggs is president of the St. Louis Car Co. He says St. Louis is his home. In the summer he lives here; in the winter he occupies an apartment in Milwaukee.

COCOANUT OIL MAKES A SPLENDID SHAMPOO

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, be careful what you wash it with.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get Mulsified cocoanut oil shampoo at most any drug store. It is very cheap and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.—ADV.

NEGRO RESCUES BOY BATHER

Caught in Undertow, Child Is Saved From Death in River.

Ernest Weinberger, 12 years old, 1325 Franklin avenue, and Sol Kolten, 12, of 1400 Wash street, donned new bathing suits yesterday morning and waded into the river at the foot of Valentine street.

A Wiggins ferry boat, leaving its wharf, created a suction that drew the Weinberger boy under the water. His companion scrambled on shore and called for help. James Robinson, 3035 Morgan street, a negro watchman, got a long iron rod and fished the boy out by getting it under his arms. Robinson rolled him on a barrel and he recovered and was taken home.

UNION LABOR OF CITY TO PLEAD FOR MOONEY

Mass Meeting Will Be Held at New Club Hall This Afternoon.

Union labor of St. Louis, through action of Central Trades and Labor Union, will hold a mass meeting at 2 p. m. today at New Club Hall, Thirteenth street and Chouteau avenue, at which addresses will be made and resolutions adopted in behalf of a new trial for Thomas J. Mooney, union organizer, now under life sentence in a California prison for complicity in the Preparedness day bomb outrage at San Francisco, in 1916.

Joseph E. Woracek, president of Central Trades and Labor Union, said the meeting will be strictly in accord with the principles of the American Federation of Labor governing such matters. He said a definite program had been prepared, which provided for the following speakers, besides himself:

John T. Smith of Kansas City, secretary and organizer of the Kansas City Industrial Council; Paul Smith, organizer for the American Federation of Labor; David Kreyling, secretary of Central Trades and Labor Union, and Maurice J. Cassidy, secretary of the Building Trades Council.

Woracek said union labor everywhere does not believe Mooney has been accorded his full constitutional rights as regards a fair trial; that he was convicted on perjured testimony, and that a new trial should be granted at once as a matter of common justice.

BOYS MUST HAVE RED HAIR AND FRECKLES TO JOIN THIS CLUB

Spokane Doctor, Recalling His Own Youth, Forms Organization of Those Adorned as He Was.

By the Associated Press.

SPOKANE, Wash., June 28. — Memory of the lot of the red-headed boy when he himself was one prompted Dr. Howard S. Clemmer of this city nearly six years ago to organize the "Clemmer Red Head Club." Since that time it has acquired a membership of 215 boys—every one of them with red hair and freckles—and it has an "infant roll" of 85 members, each with red hair or the promise of it, and each with the prospect of freckles in due time.

"In the last seven years there never has been a conviction of a red-headed boy in the Juvenile Court of this city," said Dr. Clemmer.

The "big brother" idea is about to be developed to a much greater extent in the near future, for Dr. Clemmer announces that he has perfected plans for calling to his assistance all the red-headed business and professional men of this city and others with the proper hirsute qualification, to act as advisers and sponsors for the club members.

Formed from the club membership is the Clemmer red-headed Boy Scout troop of the city, with a red-headed scout master in command.

The Red Head Club has formed a prominent and conspicuous part of many parades and celebrations. The members are annually the guests of the Interstate Fair here, where they "take in all the sights" and wind up with a big chicken dinner.

"The red-headed boy has the biggest heart in the world," Dr. Clemmer declared.

"TIZ" FOR SORE, TIRED FEET--AH!

"TIZ" is grand for aching, swollen, sweaty, calloused feet or corns.

You're footsick! Your feet feel tired, puffed up, chafed, aching, sweaty, and they need "Tiz."

"Tiz" makes feet remarkably fresh and sore-proof. "Tiz" takes the pain and burn right out of corns, callouses and bunions. "Tiz" is the grandest foot-gladdener the world has ever known.

Get a 25-cent box of "Tiz" at any drug store and end foot torture for a whole year. Never have tired, aching sweaty, smelly feet; your shoes will fit fine and you'll only wish you had tried "Tiz" sooner. Accept no substitute.—ADV.

RELIABLE METHOD OF HAIR CARE

Hair is by far the most conspicuous thing about us and is probably the most easily damaged by bad or careless treatment. If we are very careful in hair washing, we will have virtually no hair troubles. An especially fine shampoo for this weather, one that brings out all the natural beauty of the hair, that dissolves and entirely removes all dandruff, excess oil and dirt, can easily be used at trifling expense by simply dissolving a teaspoonful of canthrox (which you can get at any druggist's), in a cup of hot water. This makes a full cup of shampoo liquid, enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just the top of the head. This chemically dissolves all impurities and creates a soothing, cooling lather. Rinsing leaves the scalp spotlessly clean, soft and pliant, while the hair takes on the glossy richness of natural color, also a fluffiness which makes it seem much heavier than it is. After canthrox shampoo, arranging the hair is a pleasure.—ADV.

CROZIER SAYS BAKER DID NOT ACT ON PREPAREDNESS REQUEST

Former Chief of Ordnance Bureau Defends His Course Before House Investigating Committee.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Brigadier-General Crozier, former chief of the Ordnance Bureau, appearing today before the special House investigating committee to explain why his department was so unprepared when war came, declared he had repeatedly recommended extensions before the war, but without success. After the national defense act was passed, he said, he submitted a request to the Secretary of War for a larger personnel and for authorization to contract for ordnance, but the request was not acted upon.

"When war was declared," he continued, "the army had 600 machine guns—a ridiculously small number—500 field artillery pieces, a wholly inadequate supply of artillery ammunition and other supplies in insufficient amounts. Orders had been placed for the various things needed, but deliveries had not started."

Fortunately, he added, the army had 600,000 Springfield rifles, enough to equip an army of a million men, and 200,000,000 rounds of rifle ammunition.

ARMY TO GET BIDS ON CORN

Sealed Proposals for Canned Goods to Be Received.

Sealed bids on 1,066,080 cans of sweet corn stored in the depot of the Quartermaster of the United States Army here, together with bids on 380,000 cans stored at Camp Taylor, Ky., 60,000 cans at Camp Pike, Ark., and 56,000 cans at Camp Knox, Ky., will be received tomorrow by Capt. James A. Forree, zone surplus property officer in St. Louis, stationed at Second and Arsenal streets.

JAIL THREAT FOR TAX DODGERS

Wealth Will Save No Offender, Says Federal Commissioner.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28. — Tax dodgers, rich and poor, were promised the full limit of the law by Commissioner of Internal Revenue Roper in a statement today commenting on the recent conviction in Boston of William A. English and John O'Brien, wool merchants, who returned their taxes at $109,000 instead of $1,379,817.

"It is our determined policy," Roper said, "that wealth shall not influence to prevent wilful tax dodgers from going to jail. The big and financially able must be treated in the same way as the small wilful violator, and hence compromises through money will be rejected."

WASTE PAPER TO BUY MEALS FOR OPEN AIR SCHOOL PUPILS

Co-Operative Agreement Reached Between Board of Education and Tuberculosis Society.

Open-air school pupils who cannot afford to buy their meals will be benefited by the collection of waste paper. This has been decided in a co-operative agreement between the Board of Education and the Tuberculosis Society, according to Mrs. Arthur Lieber, chairman of the Waste Paper Committee.

"The plan is," said Mrs. Lieber, "for all of the children to bring their accumulation to the summer schools, where the paper will be sacked and sold for the benefit of the open-air schools. The Tuberculosis Society is paying for the meals of all of the children in the open-air schools who cannot afford to buy them, and we feel that this is a fine opportunity for the children of the city to assist the Tuberculosis Society in its undertaking."

Children are requested to bring their papers to the summer schools on Wednesday of each week.

JUNE BRIDE SEEKS DIVORCE BEFORE MONTH IS ENDED

Separated Eighteen Days After Marriage, Says Mrs. Erlalie Droege Fuld.

A June bride and a divorce seeker before the end of the month is Mrs. Erlalie Droege Fuld, who asked the courts yesterday to grant her a decree against Joseph H. Fuld, a dentist, 3974 Arsenal street. The petition states that they were married June 4 and separated 18 days later.

It is charged that Fuld said he was sorry he married his wife, as he thought her family had "a bunch of money." "I sure got handed a lemon," he is quoted by his wife as saying. He is accused of coldness, indifference and of speaking slightingly of his wife's religion.

Mrs. Fuld has returned to her mother's home, 5768 De Giverville avenue.

Says It Failed to Receive 25,000 Dark Squirrel Skins.

An attachment suit was filed yesterday by the Ganss Fur Co., a New York concern, against Isaac Habinsky, a Russian, for $25,000 damages on account of alleged failure to deliver to the plaintiff 25,000 dark squirrel fur skins in compliance with a contract executed Jan. 18 in New York. It is alleged that the defendant agreed to obtain the skins in Harbin, China, and to sell them to the plaintiff company at 38 cents each, delivery to be made within a reasonable time. The plaintiff avers that it paid $10,000 on account and that it has been damaged $25,000 by his failure to keep the contract.

A garnishment notice was served on Funsten Bros. & Co. of the St. Louis Fur Exchange for the purpose of tying up any furs or funds belonging to Habinsky, that he may have there. An attachment bond of $50,000 was furnished by the plaintiff.

RATIFICATION OF SUFFRAGE LIKELY ON FOURTH OF JULY

Women Will Meet at Jefferson City Tuesday and Hundreds Will Remain for Vote.

SMALL DOUBT OF PROMPT APPROVAL

House Overwhelmingly in Favor of Equal Voting Rights as Is Majority of Senate.

Legislative action in Missouri ratifying the Federal equal suffrage amendment will be taken on the Fourth of July, suffrage leaders expect, in accordance with Gov. Gardner's recommendation in his message calling the Legislature into extra session next Wednesday.

In anticipation of the action Missouri suffragists have arranged for a suffrage meeting in Jefferson City Tuesday, the day before the session opens, with a women's luncheon at noon, and a "ratification" banquet, at which Gov. Gardner and other State officials will speak, in the evening. In connection with this meeting it is planned that hundreds of women will remain at the capital to be present when the amendment actually is ratified.

There seems to be no question that favorable action will be taken. The House is overwhelmingly for suffrage. On the presidential suffrage bill in the last Senate there were 21 affirmative votes, three more than enough to pass the bill. It is even held by some lawyers that ratification of a Federal amendment does not require a majority of all Senators elected, but only a majority of those present. If this be correct, fewer than 18 votes could ratify in the Senate.

One Senator Ill.

So far as is known all Senators, except Senator Wix of Bates County, who is dangerously sick, will attend the extra session. He was favorable to suffrage in the last Senate. If he is the only absentee 17 votes will be required.

Senators Anderson and Warner, Republicans, of St. Louis, who opposed presidential suffrage, have said they will favor the ratification of the Federal amendment.

It is the expectation that the Legislature will be in session not more than a week, though that long will be required to pass an appropriation bill to pay the expenses of the session. The amendment can be ratified in one day.

It is not probable that any effort will be made to amend the Missouri election laws which are drawn with the sole idea of men voting. Attorney-General McAllister has given an opinion that election laws cannot legally be amended to include provision for women voting until after the amendment is ratified by 36 states and actually becomes a part of the United States Constitution.

Changes in Law May Be Needed.

While he has not ruled that changes are necessary to permit women to vote, he told a Post-Dispatch reporter that there might be provisions in the law which would prevent them from voting even after the Federal amendment became effective. The amendment only provides that they shall not be prevented from voting because of sex. The Attorney-General said he would examine the laws to determine whether there were any other preventive restrictions.

The suffragists, however, are firmly of the opinion that the amendment will wipe out all restrictions, and that they will be permitted to vote as soon as it is ratified.

At the banquet in Jefferson City Tuesday Gov. Gardner will speak on "Reasons for an Extra Session." The other speakers and their subjects will be: Lieutenant-Governor Crossley. "As Soon as We Can Start;" Speaker O'Fallon, "There's None to Vote Against It;" National Committeemen Babler and Goltra and Mrs. Hugh Ward, "Interesting Interludes;" Senator McKnight, "Finish the Fight;" Mrs. Nellie Burger, "Co-operation That Co-operates;" Mrs. Morrison-Fuller, "After All;" Miss Marie B. Ames, "Teaching Tactics;" Mrs. F. B. Clarke, "In Passing;" Mrs. Walter McNab Miller, "Over the Top," and Mrs. George Gellhorn, "Now Let's Adjourn."

Speakers at Luncheon.

Mrs. Claude L. Clarke of Jefferson City will deliver the address of welcome at the luncheon, at which the other speakers will be: Mrs. W. K. James of St. Joseph, response to the address of welcome; Mrs. John R. Leighty, "Organization More Than Ever and How;; Mrs. F. B. Clarke, "Training Workers Through Organization Classes in Civilization Schools;" Mrs. Elmer McKay and Mrs. W. E. Harshe, "How to Hold Branch Leagues Together;" "Citizenship Schools—Where and How—from the Local Heaquarters Viewpoint," Miss Laura Runyon; "From the State Headquarters Viewpoint," Mrs. Olive B. Swan; "From the Field Directors' Viewpoint," Miss Marie Ames; "Membership Drives and Prizes for County and Branch Leagues," Mrs. Jules Rosenerger and Mrs. J. Rudd Van Dyne; "Can Women Voters Work More Effectively as an Independent Nonpartisan group or Within the Parties as Partisans?" Mrs. Hugh Ward, Mrs. E. M. Grossman, Mrs. George Still and Mrs. W. R. Haight.

FALL FASHION MODELS NEED MANY GRACES

Forty to Be Selected This Week for Pageant to Be Held at Municipal Theater.

Young women who wish to serve as models at the St. Louis Fall Pageant of Fashion are invited to present themselves for inspection Tuesday night at the studio of Miss Olga Bates, Taylor and Euclid avenues. Forty girls are to be chosen. To succeed in the contest, according to the specifications announced, it appears that one requires merely to possess willowy slenderness, a graceful carriage, perfect poise, an irreproachable figure, a charming personality, regular features, shapely feet and a talent for wearing clothes.

The Fashion Pageant will be held at the Municipal Theater in Forest Park on Aug. 6 and 7, 13 and 14, and 20 and 21. The motive of the exhibition is named "The Enchanted Garden." The book has been written by Robert Hanna, and the show will be staged by Joseph Solari. The officers of the Style Show Committee are: Flint Garrison, chairman; Paul J. Wielandy, vice-chairman; Aaron S. Rauh, chairman of the finance committee; Sigmund Hasgall, treasurer, and Miss Anita Moore, secretary.

The styles to be displayed this year are described as simple and graceful of line, without conspicuous ornamentation. The usual emphasis will be placed upon footwear, in keeping with the city's position as a shoe manufacturing center, and the millinery accessories will be one of the show's features.

It is stated that since the institution of the annual Pageants of Fashion, the garment industry of the city has been multiplied by five. The exhibition draws numerous visitors, buyers and merchants to St. Louis.

EXECUTOR RECEIVES $40,000 COMMISSIONS IN SETTLEMENT

Fourth Accounting of Wood Estate Shows $448,750 Paid to Widow.

A fourth settlement in the estate of the late Henry Wood, banker and dairy proprietor, was filed yesterday in the Probate Court by Frank B. Coleman, attorney for George M. Block, executor of the will. It shows that between Dec. 20, 1918, and June 2 last the assets in the hands of the executor were valued at $1,138,254.57 and that he disbursed to beneficiaries and others in the same period $641,941.39, leaving a balance of $496,313.18.

The biggest disbursement was to Mrs. Minnie Wood, widow of the testator, who received stock in various corporations of a face value totaling $448,750, including 3750 shares of Burroughs Adding Machine Co. On the latter stock the executor received two dividends this year, totaling $15,000. Mrs. Wood's claim for a further share of $250,000 will be taken up by Judge Holtcamp at the September term of court.

The settlement also shows that Block has received $40,000 as commissions for his services on the disbursements in the fourth report and that Attorney Coleman was paid $10,000 for legal services. The actual value of the Wood estate was estimated at over $3,000,000.

ELECTRICIAN FALLS 40 FEET IN HIS SLEEP AND IS KILLED

George L. Buente's Skull Crushed When He Walked Through Window on Third Floor.

George L. Buente, 21 years old, arose in his sleep yesterday at 4 a. m. and walked through a window in the third floor of his home at 4215 Westminster place. He was killed in the fall of 40 feet.

Policemen were told that frequently he had been found wandering about his home while asleep. Buente was an electrician and lived with his stepfather, A. J. Smith. He fell into the yard of Former Circuit Judge Thomas L. Anderson next door, at 4219 Westminster place. His skull was crushed.

OFFICERS BUNK WITH PRIVATES

Men Awaiting Transfer Home Are Accommodated on Leviathan.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

TOULS, France, June 27.—About 4000 officers who have been cooling their heels in Brest for weeks awaiting transportation will be sent home when the Leviathan arrives Saturday. The Leviathan ordinarily carries 12,000 enlisted men, but on this voyage will have only 1500, and instead of the usual 500 officers it will have 4000. The first-class accommodations will number 700, and the rest of the officers will occupy bunks the same as the enlisted man.

Three extra companies of cooks and a band have been detailed to go on the big liner. Sleeping on a canvas bunk does not debar an officer from making himself at home in the card room, the first-class dining room and other places usually reserved for the socially elect in military rank.

One lone woman will make the voyage, Mrs. Thomas W. Lamont, wife of the New York financier, and member of J. P. Morgan & Co. Lamont, who is one of the financial advisers of the American peace mission in Paris, is returning to America. Special orders were given by President Wilson to put his wife aboard the Leviathan, despite the wishes of the army officials to maintain this strictly as a "stag" ship.

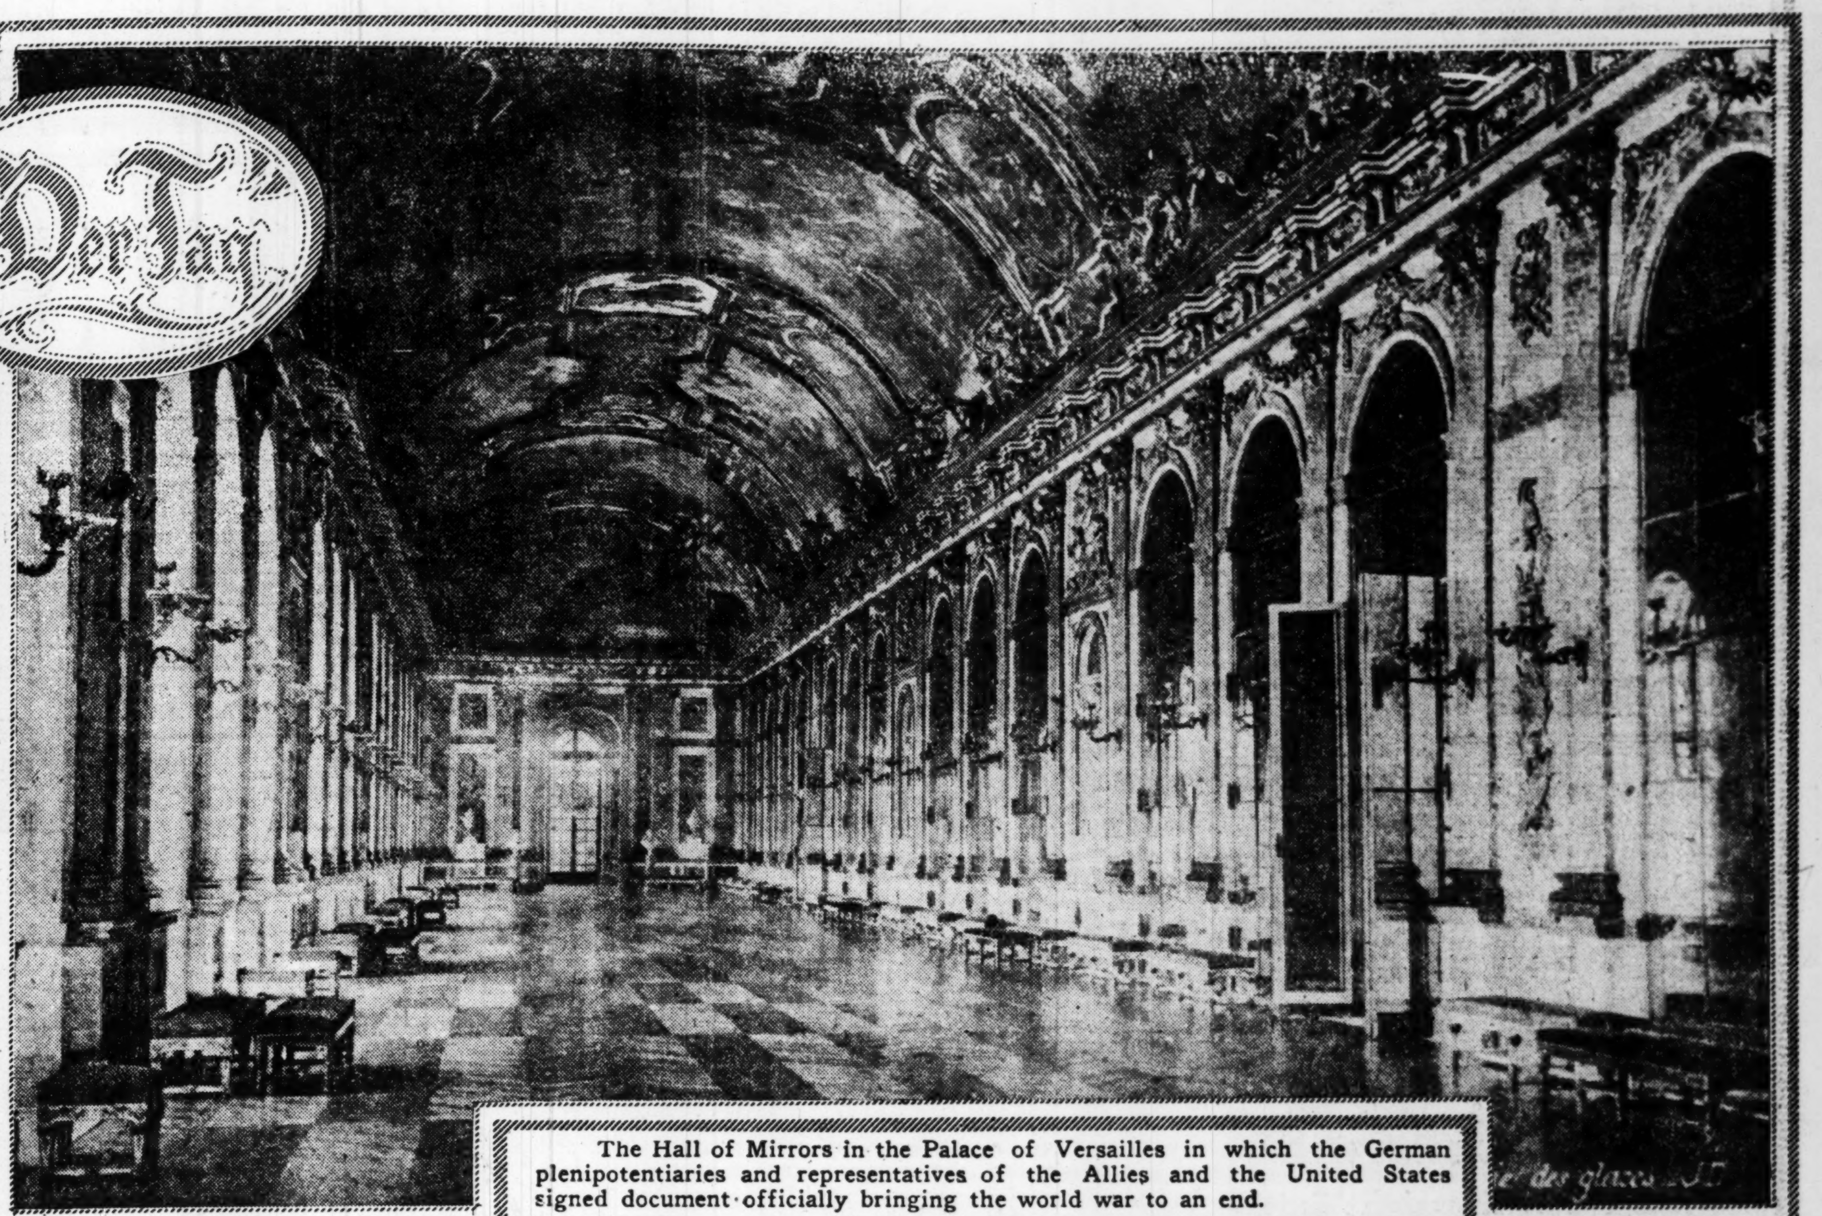
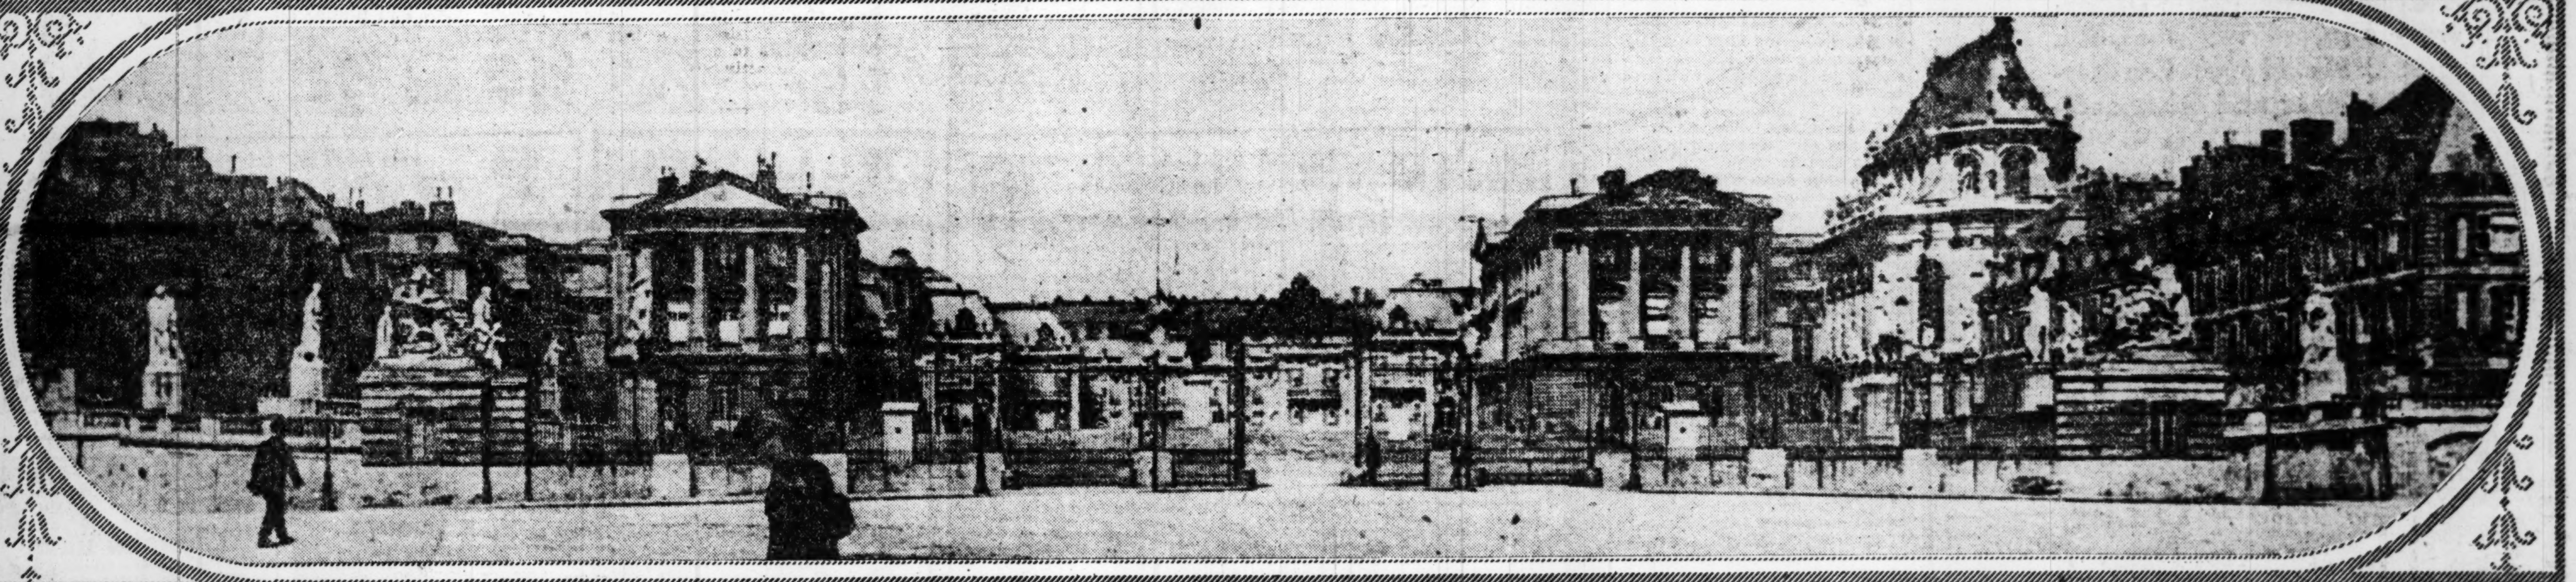
SIGNAL CORPS U.S.A.

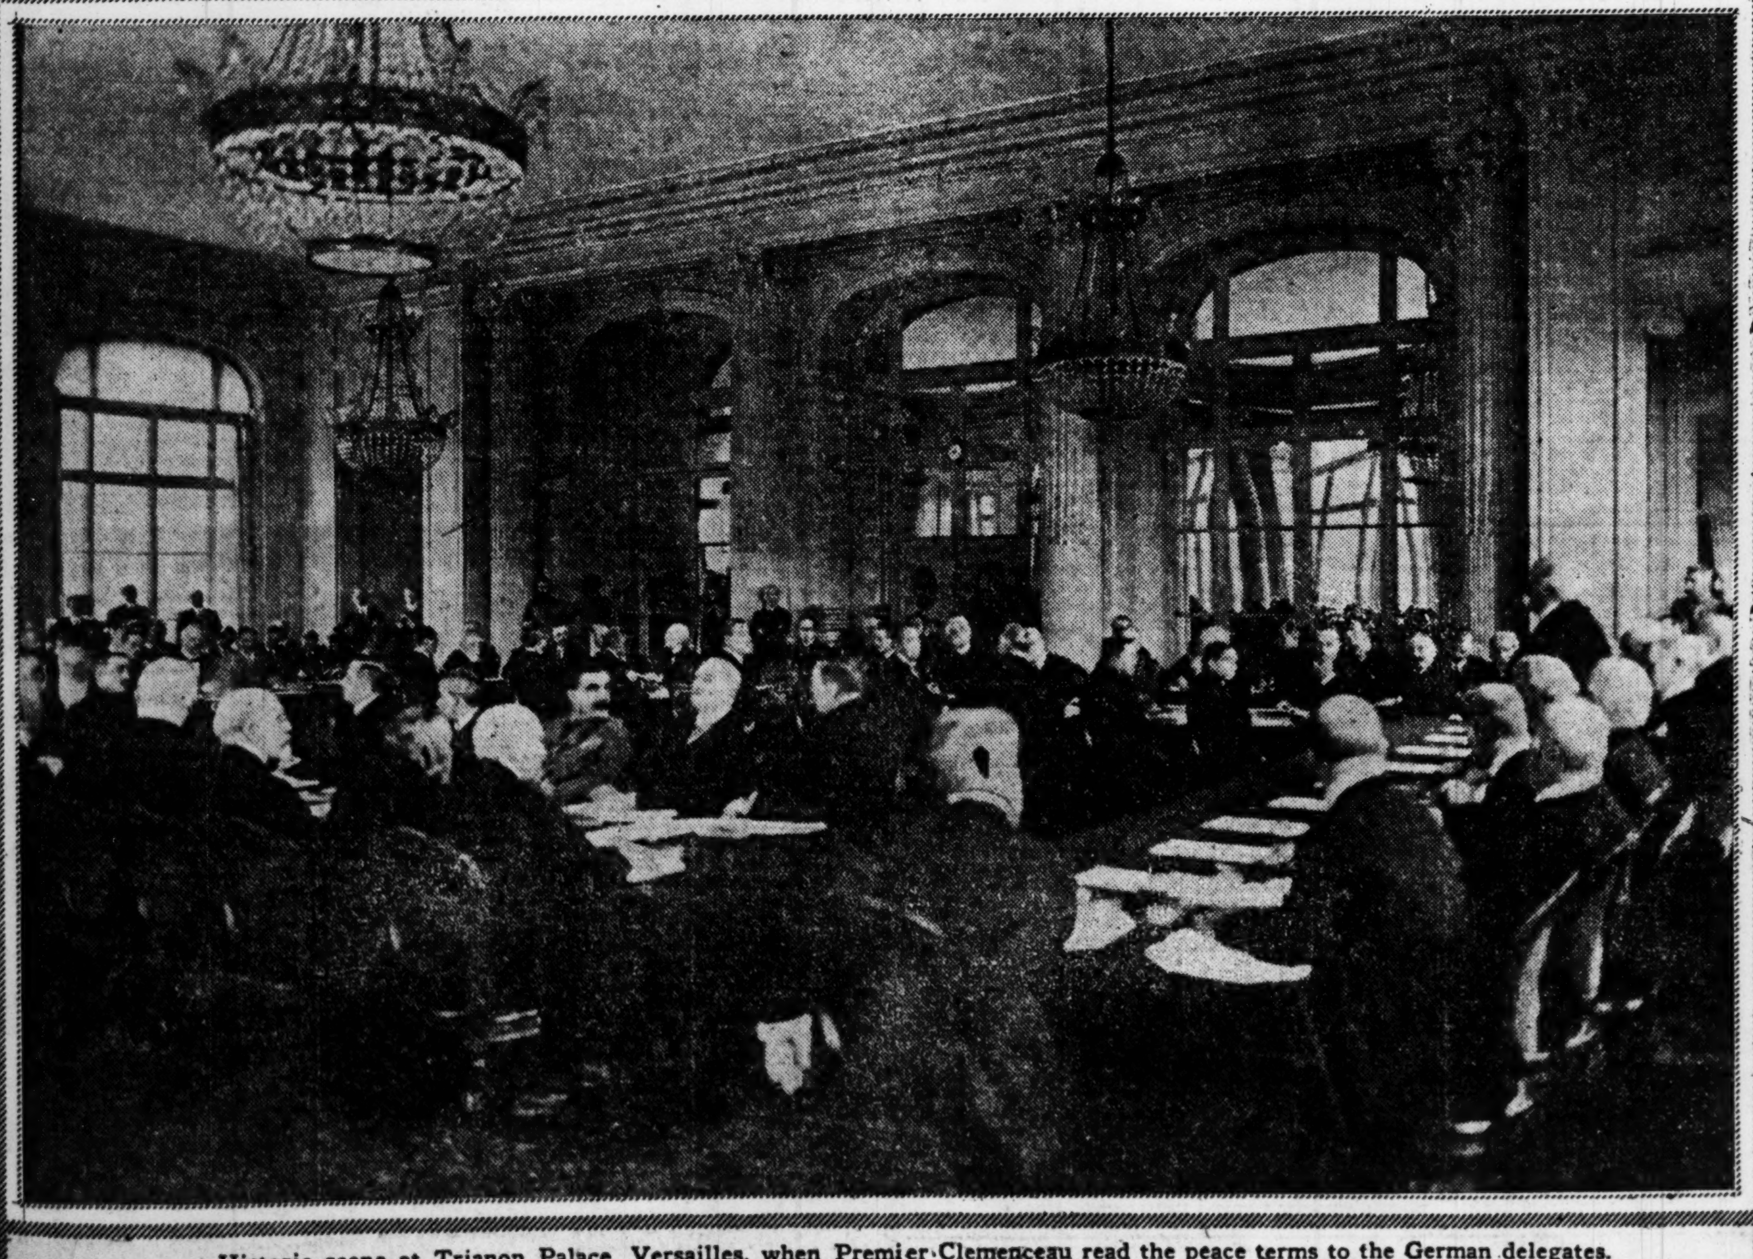
"The Big Three" in the framing of the peace terms which were signed yesterday—Lloyd George of England, Clemenceau of France, and President Wilson.



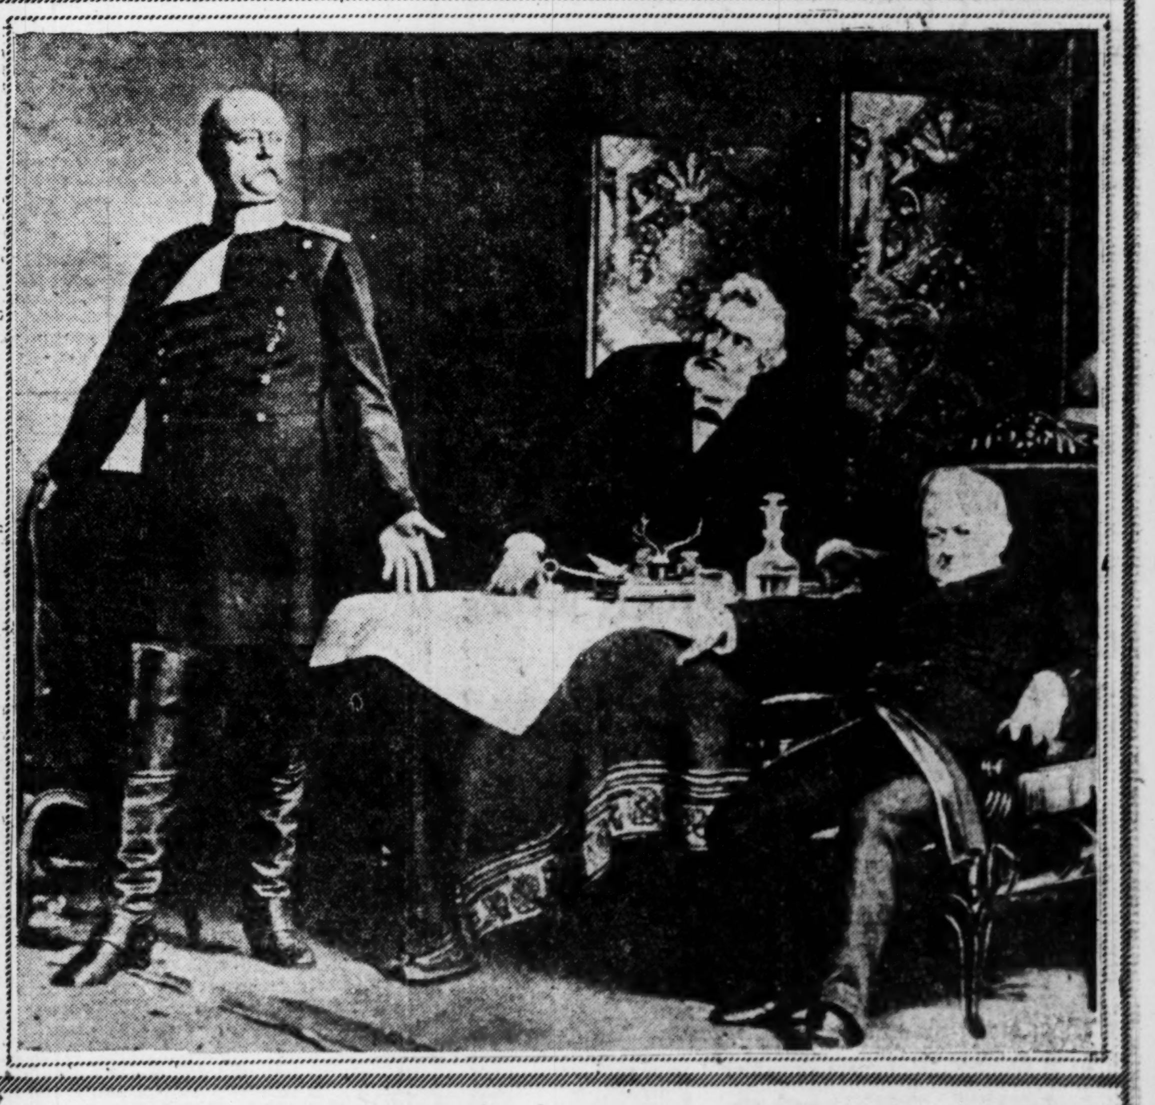
The Hall of Mirrors in the Palace of Versailles in which the German plenipotentiaries and representatives of the Allies and the United States signed document officially bringing the world war to an end.



The Palace of Versailles, scene of the most momentous treaty the world has ever known.



Historic scene at Trianon Palace, Versailles, when Premier Clemenceau read the peace terms to the German delegates.



Another scene at Versailles in 1870 when Prince Bismarck laid down the terms of peace to Jules Favre and Thiers, as painted by the German artist Wagner. France was then compelled to accept an ignominious peace after a brief war brought on by means of a forged telegram—forged by Bismarck himself. It was with these facts in mind that Premier Clemenceau remarked last week, "We have waited forty-nine years for this day."

HOW PEACE WAS FINALLY AGREED TO AT WEIMAR

Menace of German Military Leaders Threatened to the Last, but Allies' Ultimatum Prevailed.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

BERLIN, June 24.—A close observer of the confusion and excitement in Weimar could not resist the conclusion that behind it all lay some military menace. On the face of things the Government had no political case whatever for alteration of its intention to sign the treaty of peace or for its resignation. Its course had been prescribed in precise terms by Sunday's resolution of the National Assembly.

Today most of the facts are revealed and it is clearly seen that the military coup prophesied for many weeks in case of the signing of a humiliating peace, was actually attempted. The latest news is rather reassuring and hope prevails that the militarist conspiracy will fail.

Military Leaders in Session.

The most conspicuous feature in the Weimar political panorama during the last week was the gathering of military leaders which has been in constant session, sitting simultaneously with the Government—the one in the castle within the town, the other in the Belvidere summer palace just outside on the hill. When this gathering of famous leaders of the "freiwillege" became known, political circles at once appreciated its sinister significance. Vorwaerts vainly protested against the endeavor of the army chiefs to influence the policy of the Government. Commanders of the "freiwillege," it said, have no business to mix with the policy of the country, which concerns only the National Assembly and the Government.

But the council of the generals at the Belvidere summer palace was not to be distracted from its purpose, and they continued to participate in, or rather dominate, the sessions of the Government and the political parties. When the crisis was at its height a semi-official statement announced that the Generals in conference with Nosket had agreed to the necessity of signing peace. However, nothing was said about any conditions having been made by the Generals for their consent to the signing of the peace. As a matter of fact, the honor reservations had been proposed by the army chiefs, and had been made with a condition "sine qus non" (to sign with them or not to sign at all.)

People Were Sympathetic.

For a proper understanding of the situation it is necessary to add that those sentiments—especially the reservation with regard to responsibility for the war—were shared not only by the overwhelming majority of the assembly men, but by the vast majority of the German people. The National Assembly and the Government were sympathetic with the army's demands, and would have been glad to be able to sign the peace with those reservations. The clash commenced only when those reservations were rejected by the allies. The Government then would have been satisfied with a protest, and basing its action on the resolution of the National Assembly would have signed peace unconditionally. Not so the army chiefs. They at once vetoed the unconditional signing of peace.

The unofficial military Cabinet at Belvidere Palace dispatched into the town of Weimar an ultimatum to reject peace under the threat of military revolt. The Government was between the cross fire of two ultimatums. That of the allies expired in about 15 hours. A disaster seemed unavoidable. The Government dispatched to Paris an urgent request for a 48-hour prolongation of the allotted time. The rejection of this request reached the Government at noon. Another hasty and exciting session of the Government resulted and it was decided to bow before the force of the allies. The Military Council at the Belvidere returned to the decision of the Government with a counter decision demanding the refusal of the unconditional acceptance under the threat of the resignation of all the general and staff officers. Gen. Haerker, the famous victor of many battles with the Spartacans, and conqueror of many peaceful German towns, personally carried this decision to various political parties then in session.

Effect of the Message.

The effect of Maerker's message was terrific. The Center party, which the day before had almost unanimously voted for signing the peace, now reversed its decision by 68 against 14. Noske, though himself a supporter of the plan to sign, went to his party—the Majority Socialists—and made a vain appeal for the rejection of the peace treaty. Though the Majority Socialists remained firm then as now, there was no longer a majority in the National Assembly for signature owing to the defection of the Center.

The Generals had so far carried the day. The Government began to break up. Both Col. Reinhardt, Prussian Secretary of War (organizer of the "freiewillege"), and Noske, Minister of Defense, resigned. Only five hours were left for answering the ultimatum. The situation was extremely critical. The majority of the assemblymen were hopeless and helpless. Then the Independent Socialists came into the field. They used all the vast power they have over the working class to threaten as a first measure a general strike in case of submission to the Generals.

A Dramatic Clash.

Nothing could have been more dramatic than this clash between the Generals, threatening a military strike on the one hand and a small group of Independent Socialists threatening an industrial strike of the whole German working class on the other. The workers proved stronger than all the vast military machine. The Generals had to give way. Gen. Groener, chief of the general staff, addressed a letter to Ebert promising to pacify the army leaders and induce them to remain at their posts. He insisted only that Noske should remain in the Cabinet.

The political parties were immediately informed of this new turn. The National Assembly breathed freely again. The Center party had no difficulty in reversing its decision of an hour before. It is Erzberger's party and can change as quickly as he does. Once more the National Assembly came together.

Surely there has seldom been a more melancholy and depressing parliamentary meeting in history. No words of protest were uttered; the misery was too great and the time too short for protest. There was only one consideration now: To keep ahead of the flock and to prevent new bloodshed. The delay of a single speech or an interruption might be fatal. When a member of the Assembly proposed a roll call he was shouted down by cries of "No time," and frightened voices would say: "Are you mad to propose such a thing? In less than four hours our answer must be in Paris."

During the first five months of 1919, the Post-Dispatch printed 34,772 Male Help Wanted ads, 4717 more than the TWO nearest competitors COMBINED, and almost EIGHT times as many as the TWO other St. Louis evening newspapers COMBINED!

LAST MAN ON SEA BY JULY 20, IS U. S. HOPE

But French Would Extend Movements of Americans to Coast Over 55 Days.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

TOURS, France, June 28.—Fifteen minutes after the signing of peace at Versailles the evacuation of the army of occupation was scheduled to start. The embarkation machinery some time ago arranged that the first train, carrying 1000 men, would move immediately after the signing, to be followed at the rate of eight trains daily until the 168,000 men, including 2400 at Antwerp, is gone. The Fifth Division was to move first and then, descending in numerical order, come the Fourth, Third, Second and First. For the First Division is left the honor of writing in its divisional history "first to come and last to leave." However, the Secod Division closely presses the record of the First for overseas service, while all the others are far behind.

To achieve the honor of the longest overseas service does not mean much delay for the First Division. Lieutenant-Colonel Mack Garr of Ogden, Utah, the embarkation officer of the Service of Supply, will be able to move the entire army in 21 days, provided the French furnish the desired eight trains daily. This was the subject of a conference in Paris. While the expedition retains the rolling stock, the American crews which have been operating trains in France were sent home in the middle of the month and transportation now depends on French crews. French military circles are inclined to believe that two trains daily are sufficient for the Americans, which schedule necessitates 55 days to evacuate the entire army.

Homeward Bound by July 20.

Should the American schedule of eight trains be adopted, all of the divisions, except scattered detachments guarding stores, concentrating the dead in battlefield cemeteries and cleaning up areas, would be embarked and homeward bound before July 20.

The Fourth Division, which is located in Germany, starts moving practically the same time as the Fifth, which is in Luxemburg. The Fourth goes to St. Nazaire for embarkation, while the Fifth, Third, Second and First are destined for Brest. There are now 76,000 troops in Brest to embark before the end of the month. The S. O. S., which comprised the majority of the 360,000 troops sent home in June, the greatest embarkation ever effected by any nation, is now stripped to the bone. The sailings for July contemplated 320,000 men. It is impossible to transport this number from the ports. On account of delays in the peace negotiations, shipping with a capacity of 60,000 has been cancelled, saving the Government the expense of ships lying idle at the ports of France. The remainder is sufficient to accommodate 65,000 of the Service of Supply in addition to combatant troops of the army of occupation.

Keep Flags Flying on Rhine.

There is a semi-official understanding that America and Great Britain have agreed to keep their flags flying on the Rhine guaranteeing France against any aggression from Germany and constituting of any violation of the peace terms a hostile act against these countries, as well as against France and Belgium upon whom devolves most of the burden of the army of occupation. It has not yet been settled whether the American color guard will consist of a regiment or a brigade.

Bordeaux and Marseilles were closed to troop movements in June. From Havre only a single ship went weekly carrying only casual officers. Brest and St. Nazaire alone remain ports for troop movement, though St. Nazaire and Bordeaux both handle freight, consisting of unused war supplies and captured material.

FRENCH ANNOUNCE PEACE FUND

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 28.—The Chamber of Deputies yesterday appropriated 4,000,000 francs ($800,000) to defray the expenses of the victory celebration here July 14.

Socialist Deputies tried without avail to hitch to the appropriation a provision for immediate demobilization after the parade of all troops taking part in it.

GIRLS WITH JENNINGS DENY ANY WRONGDOING

Charges Against Organizer Made by Attorney for Bell Telephone Company.

Depositions taken at Clayton yesterday in behalf of O. E. Jennings, district organizer of the Electrical Workers' Union, charged with enticing a girl under age, brought out that it was Homer Hall, an attorney for the Bell Telephone Co., who informed Jefferson M. Hess of 2816 Henrietta street that his daughter, Mary Hess, a Bell telephone operator, had gone to a St. Louis County resort with Jennings last Saturday. On this information Jennings was arrested.

Miss Hess and three other young women who were with Jennings and three other union officials testified that they had aided in the telephone strike a week ago and that Jennings had promised them a chicken dinner. They said nothing improper was done.

DRINK ADDICTS ASK TREATMENT

Many Have Arranged to Take Cure After July 1.

CHICAGO, June 28.—"When alcohol steps out, remorse will enter," said a representative of one drink cure sanitarium. "Many persons have arranged for treatment beginning July 1, and we have made our plans for the overflow accordingly. Most of these patients have delayed treatment until after the first shock of a bone-dry Chicago.

During the first five months of 1919, the Post-Dispatch printed 7987 Business Opportunity "Wants"—2591 more than the FOUR other St. Louis newspapers combined.

DEPRECIATED GERMAN MONEY TO COST ENVOYS HEAVILY

Expenses of Delegates to Peace Conference Will Be Quarter Million Marks.

BERLIN, June 28.—The financial authorities who have been entrusted with the paying of the German delegation's bills at Versailles have discovered that the expense for the 250 delegates, experts, clerks and stenographers just for living alone for five weeks, totals a quarter of a million marks. This naturally does not include the personal expenses, which in themselves are considerable. This great expense is due partly because of the bad state of the German exchange, which is less than one-half that of the French franc, so that the delegates must pay the French more than 200 marks ($50) daily apiece.

Signs Corporation Tax Bill.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., June 28.—Gov. Lowden this afternoon signed the Smejkal bill placing a franchise tax of 5 cents on each $100 of capital stock of corporations doing business in Illinois. The levy is expected to bring several millions of dollars into the State Treasury annually.

GOT $5, LEFT 2 "PHONEY" RINGS

Pickpocket Made the Exchange With Pedestrian on the Street.

A pickpocket took $5 from Charles D. Breidert, 3644 Koeln avenue, on Seventh street, between Market and Chestnut streets, Friday, and deposited in his pocket two "phoney" diamond rings.

He accosted Breidert as he left a bank at Seventh and Chestnut streets, asking where he could find a pawnshop and exhibiting two rings which he asked Breidert to keep for him. He walked beside Breidert until they reached Seventh and Market streets. Breidert missed the $5 later and found in his pocket the two rings.

PURCHASE OF HOTEL AS SCHOOL DISCUSSED

Board of Education Considers Southern and Other Sites Downtown.

The Board of Education is considering the purchase of the Southern Hotel building and ground at Broadway and Walnut street for public school use. At a meeting held Friday no definite action was taken, but it was said a decision probably would be announced at the regular board meeting July 15.

President Wolfner of the board said a school building was needed in the downtown district because of the law recently passed that all persons under 18 who are employed and have not finished a grammer-school course must devote at least four hours a week to study in school.

The price which the Allen estate asks for the hotel property has not been made public. Several other sites are said to be under consideration.

TEMPS POINTS TO STATEMENTS ALLIES' UNION MUST CONTINUE

Comments on Power Over World and Assertions Made by Wilson and Poincare.

PARIS, June 28.—In an editorial reviewing the addresses of President Poincare and President Wilson at Thursday night's dinner, the Temps alludes to the French President's pointed remarks concerning the necessity of watchfulness to insure the execution of the terms of peace by Germany, and comments significantly:

"A central Government of the world has had its seat in Paris for the last five months. It commanded all the victorious armies and fleets. It held at its mercy 100,000,000 conquered enemies, and had at its disposition economic resources that are necessary for the existence of all peoples, even neutrals. Wherever it did not make itself obeyed, as in Russia or Hungary, it was because it did not make use of its power."

The newspaper dwells on the sentiments expressed by both Presidents, that the union formed to win the war must continue in order that peace may be made durable and adds:

"President Wilson's method rests entirely on Article 10 of the league of nations. That is the doctrine he is going to defend in America. We firmly hope he will triumph, and in following with our eyes the wake of his ship, we will work to the end that it shall triumph here."

SERVICE IN MEMORY OF NEGRESS

Washerwoman Who Made $1,000,000 on Hair Tonic to Be Honored.

A service in memory of Mrs. C. J. Walker, the St. Louis negro woman who started to work as a washerwoman in St. Louis at the death of her husband 14 years ago, and accumulated a fortune estimated at $1,000,000 through sale of a hair preparation for negroes, will be held at 3 p. m. today at St. Paul A. M. E. Church, 15 North Leffingwell avenue. Mrs. Walker died recently in New York.

The service will be participated in by ministers of negro churches and fraternal and charitable organizations in which Mrs. Walker took great pride and supported both in her lifetime and through bequests in her will.

After the explosion considerable sums of money in bills and coins were found blasted into portions of the metal of the safe.

"WASHINGTON IS MOST BEAUTIFUL CAPITAL"

Viscount Bryce Praises Beauty of City in a Written Comparison With Other National Centers.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—"What goes on in Washington furnishes grist for the nation's newspapers all the year round, but just now Washington, the city itself, is getting unaccustomed publicity on two accounts," says a bulletin from the National Geographic Society.

"Senator Sherman of Illinois wants to move the capital to some midwestern city. Citizens of Washington, apparently oblivious of any such consummation, are waging a national publicity campaign for representation in Congress."

Aside from these political issues, the bulletin states, Washington probably has never been such a magnet for visitors as now, and those who are coming as well as those who have gone will be interested in the following comparison of Washington with other world capitals, written by Viscount James Bryce, former British Ambassador to the United States:

"It is impossible to live in Washington and not be struck by some peculiar features and some peculiar beauties which your city possesses.

Viscount Bryce Praises City.

"No European city has so noble a cataract in its vicinity as the Great Falls of the Potomac—a magnificent piece of scenery, which you will, of course, always preserve.

"Vienna has some picturesque country, hills and woods and rocks, within a distance of 25 or 30 miles. London also has very pleasing landscapes of a softer type within about that distance; but I know of no great city in Europe (except Constantinople) that has, quite close, such beautiful scenery as has Washington in Rock Creek Park and in many of the woods that stretch along the Potomac, with the broad river in the center, and richly wooded slopes descending boldly to it on either side.

"You have not a beautiful arm of the sea at your doors, as has Constantinople, nor the magnificent mountains that surround the capitals of Rio Janeiro or Santigo de Chile, nor such a bay, or rather land-locked gulf, as that of San Francisco, with its splendid passage out to the ocean; but those are very rare things, of which there are few in the world.

Berlin in Sandy Waste.

"Take Berlin. It stands in a sandy waste, perfectly flat, with here and there a swampy pond or lake, and a sluggish stream meanders through it. It has become an imposing city; but the environs can never be beautiful, because nature has been very ungracious.

"Take Petrograd. Petrograd has a splendid water front facing its grand river, the Neva, with its vast rush of cold green water covered with ice in winter and chilling the air, and seeming to chill the landscape in summer. That, however, is the only beauty Petrograd has.

"Paris has some agreeable landscapes within reach, but nothing nearly so fine as the hills that inclose the valley in which Washington lies, and no such charm of a still wild forest as Washington affords. The Seine, too, is a stream not to be compared to your Potomac.

"Nature Has Favored Washington."

"The same thing may be said of Madrid. It stands on a level, and the mountains are too distant to come effectively into the landscape, and its only water is a wretched little brooklet called the Manzanares.

Then there is our English London, which stands in a rather tame country. It is true that there are some charming bits of quiet and pretty rural scenery in Surrey and Sussex, within a distance of from 20 to 30 miles, and there are pleasing beech woods covering the chalky hills of Bucks. Yet nature has done nothing for London comparable to what she has done for Washington. The Thames, although it fills up pretty well at high tide, is nowise comparable for volume or beauty of surroundings to your own Potomac."

BRAZILIANS LIKE U. S. FILMS

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

RIO JANEIRO, June 1.—A North American arriving in Rie do Janeiro and traversing the main street of the city—Avenida Rio Branco—can with little mental effort imagine himself in New York, Boston, San Francisco or almost any city of the United States, owing to the extensive use of American-made moving picture films.

Moving picture theaters line both sides of the avenida. Large posters with the names and pictures of North American movie stars are to be seen in almost every direction. The Brazilians can, in fact, converse as knowingly of the moving picture world as can the enthusiasts of the United States.

The American-made films also are stimulating many Brazilians to a desire to learn the English language. Although the captions and written explanations are almost completely translated into Portuguese, this cannot be done so easily with the large posters, and the patron is confronted with the necessity of reading the English if he wants to know something about the picture.

This, and the fact that occasionally English expressions are not translated, has resulted in Brazilians learning just enough English to create a desire for more.

"Y" Hut Turned Over to Students.

The Y. M. C. A. hut and canteen on Washington University campus, recently donated by the Y. M. C. A. to the university, has been turned over to the student body for one year by Chancellor Hall, at the suggestion of the students. It is to be used as a students' building, for meeting purposes, and will be under management of a joint committee of deans and students.

WAR SAVING STAMPS FOR WASTE MATTER

Scraps of Paper, Bottles, Rags, Tinfoil and Rubber Are Desired.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Every man, woman and child in New England now has a chance to obtain War Savings and Thrift Stamps without the least cost to themselves. All that is necessary is to collect the things usually thrown away and then to sell them to the Government.

The smallest scrap of paper, empty bottles rags, bits of tinfoil, pieces of rubber—all may be turned into stamps. Moreover, it will be no trouble for anyone to dispose of an accumulated stock of waste material, for every village, town and city in that part of the country is organizing agencies through which the Government may buy what would otherwise go to the dumping grounds.

The Waste Reclamation Service of the Department of Commerce has formulated a plan to save millions of dollars. It is a cooperative plan that works admirably with the national clean-up and paint-up movement which the United States Department of Labor is supporting in connection with its own-your-own-home campaign and which is of interest to all the housewives of the country. The plan includes all the departments of the Government and it reaches out to every inhabitant of the United States.

Local waste reclamation councils are to be established in each community. These will be composed of representatives of cooperating national organizations who will be selected by Mayors. Wherever practicable special weeks will be designated for the collection of certain commodities. There will be a paper week, a metal week and a rubber week. The councils will conduct educational campaigns in which the value of waste materials and the duty of conserving the resources of the country are taught.

The importance of enlisting in the waste reclamation service movement at this time, when spring days encourage the cleaning of houses, shops and city streets, is emphasized by the Government, for it is hoped to salvage a large part of the refuse that is generally destroyed by carting to city dumps. The war taught the country a few primary lessons in saving and statistics gathered during the two years in which the United States grimly faced the possibility of a long conflict have demonstrated the prodigality of people accustomed to peace and plenty.

It is estimated that 8 per cent of every ton of waste sent to the dumps is composed of rags. Dump rags can be used for making roofing felt. To destroy them, therefore, is to increase the cost of building. Clean rags are needed for manufacturing paper. Other materials that are enumerated as on the list exchangeable for War Savings and Thrift Stamps are: Canvas, books, magazines, pasteboard containers of all kinds, iron, steel, copper, brass tin foil and rubber.

CALLS LEAGUE "WILSON'S PRESBYTERIAN COVENANT"

Soviet Russia's Foreign Minister Also Characterizes Treaty as "Scrap of Paper.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

STOCKHOLM, June 28.—"A scrap of paper," was the way Tchicherin, commissioner of foreign affairs for Soviet Russia, characterized the treaty of Versailles to the correspondent in Moscow. He continued:

"The league of nations which is set up by the treaty of Versailles ensures not peace but war. It is directed against some enemy. It is a defensive alliance guaranteeing invincibility of possession to the parties of the league. It is really an enlarged coalition planned to oppose another combination and not a world organization, for which apparently the imperialists are unfit. The fact that its size is increased does not remove the character of a war alliance from coalition. The league itself bears no signs of durability, no matter how President Wilson may try to give it the appearance of permanency by his Presbyterian covenant.

"This scrap of paper will not remove the conflicting interests of the chief parties to the league. There are, for instance, no real interests which could make the United States send an army to defend India from the dangers which, according to England, confront it from us. As soon as the league faces the test of reality it will disintegrate.

The only real idea in it is the perpetuation of the alliance against Germany in a more attractive form."

SAVED INVALID; FARM REWARD

Girl Who Had Forgotten Act of Two Years Ago Gets Land Worth $18,500

DALLAS, Tex., June 28.—When a wheeled invalid chair, with an elderly woman occupant, plunged uncontrolled down a hillside, a young woman darted forward, overtook the chair, and saved the occupant from injury.

The incident occurred two years ago at Hot Springs, Ark., and the young rescuer was Miss Elizabeth Marie Tajeski, a school teacher of Dallas. She was spending her vacation there, and after the incident she devoted much time to wheeling the invalid around and reading to her.

A few days ago Miss Tajeski received notice that an Illinois farm, valued at $18,500, had been bequeathed her by the invalid, who died recently. Her name was withheld. Miss Tajeski had forgotten the Hot Springs incident, and had not corresponded with the woman.

Head Lettuce Is Scarce.

A scarcity of head lettuce prevails in the local market, commission merchants said yesterday, owing to the fact that the local crop virtually had been destroyed by the heat and recent rains. At the Barry Commission Co. it was said that Michigan head lettuce, which sold last week at $1.25 a crate, now brings $3.25. A crate contains 24 heads.

A group of children at 5211 Kensington avenue recently gave a show followed by a sale of ice cream and soda and made $25 to aid the children of the tenement districts during the hot months. With the exception of Hymen Duitz, who lives at 5183 Cates avenue, the children all live on Kensington avenue, and their names and respective numbers follow: Idamay Siegel, 5204A; Phillis Hartnett, 5191; Virginia Grant, 5202; Thelma Siegel, 5204A; Julian, Mirza and James Shelton Jr., 5211; Clara Richter, 5205; Frieda Atwood, 5219; Isabell Austin, 5193; Virginia Lee Gregg, 5216, and Jane Eberhardt, 5204. They were assisted in the sale of tickets by Marjorie Lee, 917 Clarendon.

Gertrude Bishop, 5037 Enright avenue, and Dorothy and Ruth Spieldoch, 5041A Enright, collected $11.05 for the babies from their relatives and intimate friends.

A check for $4.29, the proceeds of a lemonade stand and donations, was sent to the Milk and Ice Fund by John Semmelmeyer Jr., 5949 Maple avenue. Jean and Selma Charak, 6023 Maple avenue, were his coworkers.

An anonymous contribution of $2 was received "In memory of one who loved children."

HUDSON SUPER SIX

What Car Now Rivals The Hudson Super-Six?

Does Any Other Name Appeal Like Hudson? Developed By Ten Years' Experience—It Approaches the Perfection Men Had Predicted

Owners of Hudson cars understand the perfection that has been attained in the new Super-Six. They have had experience with its reliability and endurance. It was they who have done so much to aid in its development.

And therefore it is natural that when the new Super-Six was announced, the first buyers should be those who knew the car best.

Its Quality Never Questioned

Not since the first Super-Six—four years ago—proved its leadership on speedway and in road test, has anyone questioned its position.

It was the coveted car of thousands who could not obtain deliveries and of other thousands who could not meet its price.

Now production is greater than ever. More buyers can be accommodated than has been possible.

Before you make your choice, look over all the fine cars. Let your decision result from the known qualities and their comparative prices.

Here Is Hudson Proof

The new Super-Six is just such a car as you would expect. It typifies all the experience gained in building 60,000 earlier models. Every speed and endurance test in some way influenced an improvement in its performance and endurance.

As a result the new Super-Six starts easier, rides easier and runs more smoothly. All the old qualities are retained—many are enhanced.

Think of the value of such a test as the double trans-continental run in which a seven-passenger touring car made the round trip from San Francisco to New York in 10 days, 21 hours. Or the 24-hour run in which one man drove 1819 miles. So also of the many speedway contests. Records more minute than the temperature charts of the most careful physician were kept of every phase of Hudson tests. As a result Hudson engineers found ways of enlarging Super-Six attributes, not possible under other circumstances.

That is why each new Hudson is superior to its predecessor. It is why the new model is more desirable than any that has preceded it.

As Always in the Past, Hudsons Are Scarce

There have never been sufficient Hudson to meet the normal demand. Midseason has always seen a Hudson shortage. This year is no exception.

Dealers are keeping delivery lists made up in the same sequence as orders are placed.

Some dealers are already sold out for weeks ahead. The situation grows more acute daily.

So see about your Hudson now.

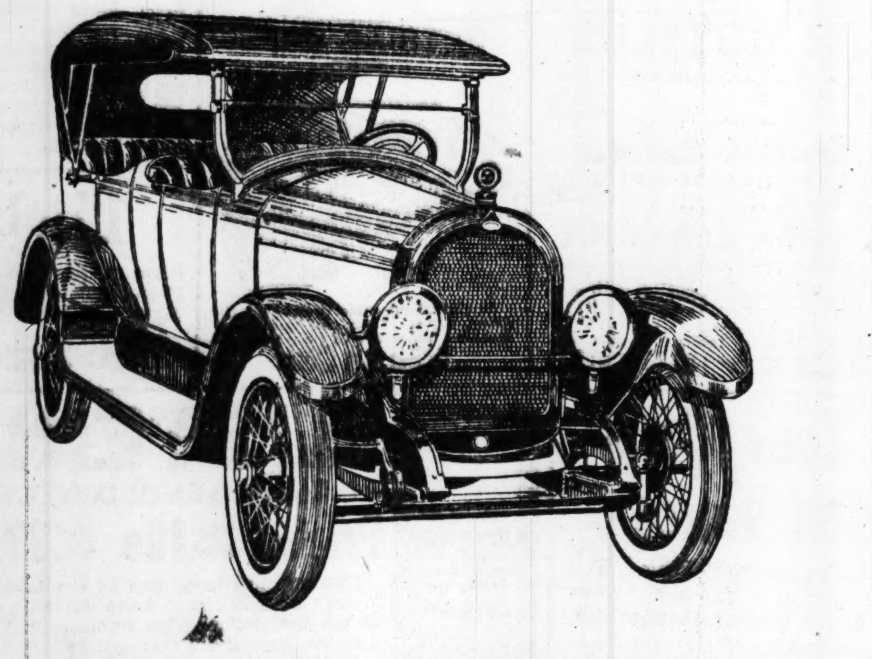
MARMON 34

Advanced Engineering — Stabilized Design



These Are the Chief Reasons for Marmon Riding Ease

1. The low center of gravity and even distribution of weight between the front and back wheels.
2. No overhanging mass, and double compound cantilever springs permit of no body side-swaying. A vital factor in the roadability of a car.
3. Minimum unsprung weight. Road shocks are accentuated by the weight of the parts below the springs (the unsprung weight), and the greater this unsprung weight the more violent are the shocks that are transmitted upward. By scientific construction the weight below the Marmon springs is very much less than in the conventional design and the road shocks are proportionately less.

Marmon's Long Wheelbase—136 inches—is exactly the length best suited to perfect riding for the weight and balance of the car.

"EL CAPITAN" THIS WEEK IF WEATHER ALLOWS

Sousa's Comic Opera Will Be Attraction at Municipal Theater in Forest Park.

For the third week of the open-air opera season at the Municipal Theater in Forest Park the attraction will be "El Capitan," comic opera in three acts, of which the score is by John Philip Sousa and the book by Charles Klein. The opening performance—with a proviso concerning the weather, which experience has shown always to be apropos—will be given tomorrow night.

The succulently comical part of Don Medigua, vainglorious and cowardly Viceroy of Perú, is one in which De Wolf Hopper scored one of his conspicuous successes. It will be taken here by William Danforth, who afforded a pungent savor of his quality as a funmaker in the role of the Sheriff of Nottingham in "Robin Hood."

The work has one popular air, the march, without which at one time there was no band concert. It is heard repeatedly in various forms, including an aria by Don Medigua. The cast is announced as follows:

Don Enrico Madigua—	William Danforth
Senor Ambille Pozzo..	Frank Moulan
Don Luiz Cazarro..	Charles Gallagher
Count Hernando Verranda—	Craig Gantvoort
Scaramba............	Carl Gantvoort
Nevado............	William Davidson
Montalba..........	Martin Lillienfeld
Gen. Herbana......	William Davidson
Estrelda...........	Carolina Andrews
Princess Marghanza..	Mildred Rogers
Isabel..............	Blanche Duffield

The performance on Friday night is designed to take the place of the usual civic Fourth of July entertainment. The Mayor's Welcoming Committee will be host to St. Louis aviators, marines and sailors.

MORE AMERICANS LEAVE ARCHANGEL ON WAY TO BREST

All Officers and 20 Enlisted Men of 310th Engineers Decorated Before Sailing.

By the Associated Press.

ARCHANGEL, Friday, June 27.—The last of the American forces here with the exception of Brigadier-General Wilds P. Richardson, the American commander, and a small detachment of headquarters troops, embarked today for Brest. The forces which left were a battalion of the 310th Engineers. Before sailing, every officer of the battalion and 20 enlisted men were decorated by the Russian command for gallantry and efficiency.

Gen. Richardson and the headquarters detachment will remain here several weeks. The field railway troops on the Murmansk front will leave shortly. In view of the valuable services of these latter troops, the North Russian Government is pleading strongly for their retention throughout the summer.

The departure of the 310th Engineers marks the close of American participation in the Archangel campaign. With the exception of a strong British reserve this campaign is being conducted now only by the Russians. The Russians and British on the Dvina front are gaining ground and have taken a number of prisoners during the last two weeks' fighting.

BRUISE ON ARM DECIDES CASE

Alton Judge Rules It Is Not Birthmark and Fines Defendant.

Bruise or birthmark? This was the question before Police Magistrate Maguire of Alton yesterday, when he was called upon to hand down a decision in the case of Mrs. Mary Augustus against John Demitries.

Mrs. Augustus appeared before Maguire several days ago to charge Demitries with assault. In proof of her statement, when the case was called, she exhibited a discoloration on her arm.

Demitires, however, denied the discoloration was a bruise. "It is a birthmark," he said. So Magistrate Maguire held the case under advisement, recalling Mrs. Augustus yesterday. The discoloration had subsided. The Magistrate decided it was a bruise and fined Demitries $5 and costs.

Demitries, however, brought counter charges against the woman, resulting in another $5 fine, this time assessed against Mrs. Augustus.

OUTING FOR POOR ON FOURTH

Volunteers of America Will Give Picnic for Women and Children.

The twentieth annual outing of the Volunteers of America for the poor women and children of St. Louis will take place on the Fourth of July. Refreshments will be furnished free of charge. Maj. J. Charles Barlar, local manager, said that on account of reconstruction work among the needy, the organization is in need of more funds to carry out the project with the customary success, and is campaigning for subscriptions. The beneficiaries consist of persons of all nationalities. The only requirement is that they are in need.

AMERICAN LABOR READY TO HELP GERMANY, GOMPERS SAYS

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—"The American Federation of Labor is ready to extend the helping hand to Germany if the Germans show themselves worthy," declared Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, in addressing today members of the organization at the launching of the cargo-carrier, Afel, at the Hog Island shipyards.

Gompers uttered his significant words on the eve of his return to Europe to continue the work of building up the shattered forces of labor on the Continent. The fact that Gompers is shortly to return to France was told by Mathew C. Brush, president of the American International Shipbuilding Co.

"To me this is an epoch-making event," said Gompers, "not only because of the purpose for which we are assembled—the launching of the Afel—but also because of the signing of the peace treaty. At last the dawn of a new era has come, that for which you men labored in this the greatest of shipyards.

"We fought Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and Turkey, not from our desire to fight, but to rid their peoples of oppression from their masters and to give them an opportunity for self-expression. If our former enemies will but show themselves worthy we will gladly extend to them the hand of fraternity."

EVERY LITTLE DIVISION ALONG THE RIVER RHINE HAS PAPER ALL ITS OWN

Doughboys, While Marking Time in Germany, Publish All Sorts and Conditions of Periodicals for Amusement.

ON the Rhine these days, every little division has a paper of its own. So it appears from the variety of publications now reaching the Post-Dispatch office from the zone of the American Army of Occupation.

The First Division gets out the Bridgehead Sentinel, an eight-page weekly, at Montabaur. The Indian, in magazine form, is published weekly by the Second Division Association, at Neuwied-on-Rhine. The Third Division has an ambitious eight-page weekly, the Watch on the Rhine, printed at Andernach, for which a circulation of 30,000 is claimed. One of the units of the Third Division, the Eighteenth Field Artillery, puts over the Barrage every week, at Polch. It is a four-page paper.

Some issues of the papers have contained apologies for certain deficiencies in previous issues, and have set forth the difficulties which their managers have had to encounter.

"The Bridgehead Sentinel," it is stated in that paper, "is printed in a German shop, where the compositors, setting type by hand, cannot read English; they are trying their best, but they are handicapped. Some day we hope to find a linotype machine and a real press, where both sides of the paper can be printed at the same time."

One issue of the Barrage, it is related in a subsequent number, was placed under an odd limitation by the lack of the letter "y," the supply of which ran out before the paper had been set up. "Two articles had to be written which did not contain a 'y,'" the Barrage says. "Several times the paper threatened to go 'kaput,' because of men going to college or being transferred.

A Skirmish for Type

"This shop originally contained about enough English-speaking type to get three columns. Sergt. Y. scoured the division area for type and four cases were obtained. That made it possible for the printers to get out a paper by going to press twice and distributing the type after each run. After some delay, more type was secured from Frankfort."

The Bridgehead Sentinel has plenty of type, but no dollar marks, and has to quote prices in German money or spell out the word "dollars."

As in the case of earlier army papers, the contributed letters and verses, largely from the enlisted men, are of chief interest. The Watch on the Rhine prints this one, signed by "R. A. H.," K Company, Fourth Infantry:

WHEN I'LL RE-ENLIST.

When army cooks who fed me slum
Have passed beyond to Kingdom Come,
And "Y" girls find they do not know
Just why they joined this holy show;
When love is dead and no one kissed,
I think, perhaps, I'll re-enlist.

When Generals ask for a Russian salute
And give their stars to a second "loot;"
Or Colonels bow with bended knees
To tell the Buck he's all the cheese;
When money is lost but never missed,
Why then, perhaps, I'll re-enlist.

When air we breathe has formed a crust
Over the oceans, made of rust;
And seventy-fives shoot diamond rings,
While whisky flows from all the springs;
If all this happens—should God insist,
Without a doubt, I'll re-enlist.

"Who Won the War?" is the subject of discussion in this paragraph from The Barrage:

"It is practically certain that as soon as it is found who won the war we can all go home, so in Monday's balloting that question was decided in the regiment. Of course the Y. M. C. A., K. C., M. P.'s, etc., all received their part of the credit. Some went so far as to blame it on goldfish; corn bill, hobnails and cooties. Others, with an unusual show of learning, decided upon the allies or in other words, all of us. One buck private with extraordinary generalship outlined the plan of battle in this manner: 'The Y. M. C. A. went over the top assisted by the M. P.'s. The Pill Rollers put over a barrage, while the second looies carried ammunition and the marines marked time.' Some showed partiality to several divisions, and a few remembered about the S. O. S. Now if they could have all decided on one answer, we might have gone home, but now as it is, we will be forced to wait until next election day; doggone it.'"

The Bridgehead Sentinel prints this contribution from a chaplain:

TO THE STATUE OF LIBERTY.

We know not when we will get home,
This First Division of renown;
We don't want you to stand and wait,
So take a chair and please sit down.

A news item in the same issue, says:

"Wild deer have been seen grazing near Vielbach, and the question has arisen whether or not hunting these animals would constitute a violation of the well-known laws dealing with fraternization."

The Sentinel is running, as a serial, the "Legends of the Rhineland," including the fanciful stories of the Lorelei, the Seven Sisters and the Castle of Rheinfels.

This is what the Sentinel has to say in its editorial column on the theme of prohibition:

"In the concrete we are for it unequivocally. There is no good argument that can be raised in favor of alcohol. Therefore, we are for the prohibition amendment, as is every man who stops to think of the question in the light of good or evil for humanity and the country at large.

The Prohibition Question

"On the question of the passing of the prohibition amendment, however, we cannot agree with our prohibition friends in their methods. It may be true that the amendment would have been ratified by the states if we had all been home. But—the country was at war, and a large body of short-haired sisters and long-haired brothers, instead of bending every effort to making victory certain in Europe, used all of their powers and strength to push through prohibition regardless of the fact that many of our comrades were being killed, or maimed, because the whole country was not devoted solely to winning the war.

"It may be that they have the best interests of their fellow men at heart. We cannot see it that way. Our idea of having the best interests of the country at heart is to forget 'rights' when our country is at war, and think only of 'obligations.' That seems to be the duty of every citizen of a republic. The prohibitionists didn't look at it that way, in our opinion."

The Indian, in a prospectus of the attractions of Neuwied, where it is published, says it is a city of 20,000 inhabitants, with extensive iron works and schwemmstein factories. It goes on to say that schwemmstein is the volcanic ash cast up when the Rhine Valley was young. It does not indicate what it is now used for, but an etymological guess might be that it is a kind of soapstone.

"Long Live Lady Nick" is an article in the Indian, the writer of which, a Corporal in the Marines, takes prohibition as a settled fact but urges that no one try to abolish the cigarette, "which has done more to win the war than any one thing I know of." He declares that "Lady Nick, next to the Red Cross nurse, is the rose of No Man's Land."

"Will They Get By?" is the title of an editorial in the Sentinel, which refers to the war record of Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey, and says the American public, which is now spending money and attention on these two, must have a short memory. Of Willard the paper says:

"Early in the war, it is true, he publicly announced his intention of enlisting, but this bluff was called and he promptly showed that he was nothing but a penny-grabbing seeker after notoriety. Of massive build, admirably suited for carrying a pack or a machine gun, this great hulking brute sat back and absolutely refused to take any interest in the struggle that his country was making.

"Now there is much talk that he is to receive $100,000 for his share of the fight proceeds. Will the country stand for it?"

No Praise for Dempsey

Of Dempsey it says that he "shuttled back and forth from one state to another to avoid the draft, and took no active part in the war, though he is younger and in better condition physically than many of the men in this division." It declares that "the veterans of this war should, with a liberal use of tar and feathers, impress upon the slackers that the army is in favor of boxing, but by MEN, and not by the Willards and Dempseys of the ring game."

The subject of German propaganda among the men of the Army of Occupation appears in occasional paragraphs. Sergt. Oliver Carr of the Fifth Marines writes, in The Indian:

"We know that Germany has at work the greatest international propaganda system in the world, and if we do not watch ourselves, that same system will bear fruit in us.

"Do you not sometimes say to yourself: 'Now won't the folks at home be surprised when I tell them how the Germans treated me while in Germany.' That is where the danger lies. When we get home most of

"GIVE US MORE POLLYANNAS"

SAYS GEORGE HORACE LORIMER,

WHO BELIEVES IN NEW WRITERS

"Past Performance Avails Little With the Reading Public," Editor of Saturday Evening Post Declares, in Discussing "The Big Name Fallacy."

Experience Has Shown Him "That the Most Telling Successes That We Have Ever Had Have Been With Stories by Unknown and Anonymous Writers."

GEORGE HORACE LORIMER.

By a Special Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

PHILADELPHIA, June 27

"RIGHT now this country needs a lot of professional Pollyannas on the job. America has never been so good a country so clean, a country so altogether a desirable country in which to live as it is today. Yet we are permitting the yellow dogs of discontent to bark and yelp their hydrophobic lies in the press, without bothering to print the adequate antidotes of truth beside them. The muckraker has been succeeded by the purveyor of half lies, near lies and damned lies. Divine discontent—heretofore the great American incentive to true progress—is being superseded by a new discontent that believes in nothing but the devil and all his works."

The speaker is George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post. He is addressing, collectively, the reading public, but specifically the writers of America, for he had just been asked by the interviewer to lift the curtain and reveal something "back stage" concerning the big weekly magazine of which he is the dominating head. Mr. Lorimer's plea for more Pollyannas came out in a discussion of the American magazine field, the kind of reading matter the public likes, how the Saturday Evening Post discovers and develops young writers and the opportunities for young writers who have the great urge "to break into print."

"The men who have the best chance with us are total strangers," says Mr. Lorimer, who is ever on the lookout for new writers with new ideas, and he holds "that the value of his readers to an editor, depends altogether on their ability to discover new talent, either developed or potential."

It was as a newspaper reporter that Mr. Lorimer started his journalistic career. Born in Louisville, Ky., in 1868, and educated in the Chicago public schools, with college courses at Colby and Yale, Mr. Lorimer first entered the downtown office of Armour & Co. in Chicago as a billing clerk, finally becoming the head of a department. But the call to journalism was irresistible and he hied himself to Boston, where he began as a police reporter. It is small wonder, then, that he has a warm spot in his heart for the newspaper man and considers the newspaper office as an all-important breeder of magazine writers.

Looking for Young Blood

Some 25,000 to 30,000 manuscripts are submitted to Mr. Lorimer every year, and so in the very performance of his work he exercises a strong influence on the development of the new writer. And he is always looking for young blood. He regards the magazine that tries to print none but the old and well-known names over and over again as peculiarly liable to what he calls "periodical arteriosclerosis," just as he calls the combination of sex and sensation in a magazine "cocktail editing."

"Writing is like religion," Mr. Lorimer says. "An editor can point out the straight and narrow path, but every man who feels the call must, in the end, work out his own salvation. And I might add that while many are called few are chosen.

"One class of beginners thinks that if they can imitate style or acquire style the fight is won; but style without ideas is as useless as an edged tool without material with which to work. On the other hand, another class of young writers that have ideas think to write acceptably without serving an apprenticeship learning how to use the tools of their trade.

"Given talent for it, or even genius for it, a young man must prepare himself for writing as he would for any profession—by study and practice. Men do not expect to leap over night into the practice of either medicine or law. But there is an idea current that writing is a haphazard profession and that success in it just happens. I know of none that involves more drudgery and hard work during the years of preparation, or that requires more continuous efforts to maintain a once-won place with the public. On every story that a writer publishes there is a plebiscite to determine whether he shall be encouraged to continue. Past performance avails little with the reading public. Rather it makes it more critical and exacting. A writer's reputation always depends on his next story.

"I believe that newspaper training is a great help to the man who wants to write for the magazines. The daily paper sustains the same relation to the young writer as the hospital to the medical student—it is the first great school of practical experience. Take almost any of the men who are doing good work today and you will find that they have been reporters. Newspaper training teaches three invaluable things: To do what you are told to do, to do it quickly, and that there are no excuses for not doing it. Then a man who writes for the magazines today should have a trained news sense, for most of our special articles and many of our stories reflect or are based on the news of the week or the month.

"There are some drawbacks to a newspaper experience. It teaches facility, but a man may easily become too facile. That, I think, is why so many of the new novels read as if they are first drafts of stories. They are written at white heat, with journalistic swiftness, and published before the cooling off and rewriting process has taken place. Good writing is slow writing, hard writing, rewriting.

"One should never forget that though there are points of contact between the newspaper, the periodical and the book they and the material that go to make them up are, and in many important particulars must be widely different in style, subject and method of treatment. It is nonsense to apply book standards to periodicals and periodical standards to newspapers, as critics and professors of English are continually doing. The best serial may be totally unfitted for book publication, and a great novel that can be read with enjoyment in an evening or two may be totally lacking in serial quality. A newspaper is life on the run; a periodical life on the walk and a novel may be life running, walking or sitting.

"Formerly only one class of magazines dealt with business, the trade journal, and it naturally concerned itself with details and technicalities. But we saw business literature as a vivid and romantic panorama of the things that interest and touch all the people.

Americans Interested in Work

"Thirty years ago American magazines were rather generally modeled on the English ones, and they were made for a country that has a leisure class. The final ambition of the English worker was to become a member of it. We have no leisure class in America.

"Americans work and their first and last interest is their work. If there is anything in the idea that literature and journalism should reflect life, then the American magazine should, first of all, reflect American work. American life is business, though not, as many people regard it, an affair of musty ledgers and sordid haggling, but a swiftly moving drama of achievement.

"Europeans are nations of shopkeepers, but we have not reached the shopkeeping stage of civilization over here. We are still in the wholesale business. We spend dollars, not pennies; we save thousands, not shillings. But we work a lifetime and so produce more to spend and more to save. The moment an American retires he is no longer interesting to anyone but himself, and the average man who retires is usually a good deal of a bore to himself even. There is no use taking valuable time to chloroform film; he is already Oslerized. Play and the things that go with idleness have slain their thousands, where overwork has slain its hundreds.

"Thirty years ago the average magazine appealed particularly to women and casually to men. Twenty years ago it was said that men wouldn't buy magazines. Our theory was then, as it is now, that if a magazine appealed to men women would want it, too, and that if a magazine were to appeal to men it must reflect American business in the broader sense. We think that we have proved our contentions. But it was slow work to develop writers who both had the knowledge and could see that every element of romance and high adventure could be found in American business; that it had its great heroes and heroines, its adventuresses and adventurers, its Spanish Main, its buccaneers, its tragedy, its pathos, its comedy.

Anent the Muckrackers

"The magazine of today," continued Mr. Lorimer, "is frankly journalistic. It fails whenever it tries to handle daily news events, but it succeeds when it takes up what I may call weekly and monthly news events—matters of such great national importance that the incomplete news story and editorial in the daily only whet instead of satisfying interest. The magazines, with their special articles on business and politics, have largely taken the place of that group of great personal editors who used to mold public opinion. Even the muckrakers did good work for the country. Yesterday business was business, meaning go as far as you like just so you keep out of jail; today business is something a great deal better, and a still brighter tomorrow is just below our horizon—not the red sun of Bolshevism or the pink dawn of Socialism, but mutual understanding, tolerance and co-operation.

"Our muckrakers served a useful purpose, but a good deal of their writing was half-truths, based on half-knowledge, because few of them had had practical experience of the things of which they wrote. The crying need of the country today is short summer courses in our factories and offices for professors of political economy; jobs in the city hall for political reformers; six months' terms in jail, with practical intensive courses, for our amateur and parlor Bolsheviki, and primary instructor in sincerity and common sense for our Congressmen.

"There is always the danger that a man who makes a profession of finding the bad in things will consistently overlook the good. Right now this country needs a lot of professional Pollyannas on the job. America has never been so good a country, so clean a country, so altogether a desirable country in which to live as it is today. Yet we are permitting the yellow dogs of discontent to bark and yelp their hydrophobic lies in the press without bothering to print the adequate antidotes of truth beside them. The muckraker has been succeeded by the purveyor of half-lies, near lies and damned lies. Divine discontent—heretofore the great American incentive to true progress—is being superseded by a new discontent that believes in nothing but the devil and all his works.

Materialism vs. Art

"But I am getting over on another track. To return to our subject, the decline and fall of the old weekly was like the decline and fall of any business. Its owners made money, grew old and fat, and failed to keep in touch with the people. They even began to feel a little superior to the people—to think that perhaps the people must be written down to, or someone or another of the fool notions that breed in brains that have fattened on success. Publishers began to say that the weekly had gone out of fashion. But the only fashion in magazines and in magazine stories is human nature; and that does not change. It is the man who makes the magazine who changes, and then all the King's horses and all the King's advertising can't pull it back into public favor. Better a dead horse than a sick one—there's something final about the former.

"The conduct of a magazine should be businesslike, I think. I never could quite understand why a man should permit the offspring of his brain to be treated as friendless orphans. All writing, up to a certain point, is an artistic matter. But when the manuscript is finished it becomes, so far as the writer is concerned, a commercial matter, too. Then he should insist on businesslike treatment. Incidentally, he should give it, and the same fair play he expects for himself, to his editor.

"Once the notion was held that a man was lucky to get his work published, and that to want money for it was to take a low-browed view of a high-browed matter. He was given something that was called an honorarium, if he got anything; but, like most things with imposing names, it didn't amount to much. To live respectably and to eat regularly, he usually had to have a job. Now, when an increasingly large number of men live by their pens no manuscript should be kept more than a week, and three or four days ought to be sufficient to dispose of the average one. It is just as easy for an editor to keep up with his work day by day as to let it get behind a month, and then to keep up with it.

Relations With the Writer

"The writer is entitled to a prompt decision, and that helps some with him. Paying on acceptance helps more, for he usually needs the money quite as much as the man who makes a living selling hides. The old method of paying on publication, keeping the author waiting for weeks and months and sometimes years for his money, is a relic of the dark ages of magazine making. But it is still twilight in some periodical offices.

"It is my feeling that an editor should not accept an article or a story about which he feels the slightest doubt. You do not find business men entering into an engagement when they are doubtful of its wisdom. If an editor isn't quite sure that he likes a thing, his readers will probably be sure that they don't like it. To keep the wrong things out is quite as important as to get the right things into a magazine.

"I believe in one-man power on a magazine or a newspaper. Delane of the London Times had the right idea when he said that 'Whatever appears in the Times should proceed from the initiative of whoever holds my place.' That may sound like conceit, but it's simple common sense. Editors and crowned heads are the only people in the world, bar a certain historic exception, with the right to say we. Editors should be the only despots. If the editor doesn't make good, what a publisher needs is a new editor, not a dozen editors. No human affair is strong enough to stand the mistakes of two men."

Mr. Lorimer is most accessible. The reason why is summed up in this statement:

"I see everybody who has any real business with me. You never know what you are going to miss. It is better to see a hundred of the hopeless than to miss one hopeful. That, of course, does not mean that an editor can spend time with the men who want to read their manuscript to him or listen to every interminable bore who has a panacea for world ills. The great writer is like the great doctor—sure of only one thing—his own limitations—and he writes better and longer than he talks.

"All the time a keen search is going on in the magazine world for the new writer. This wail that the unknowns have no chance comes from men who are not unknown, to the editors at least. They are known to us by their works, which we have all read, and they are bad. There are many reasons why any editor should be at the front door waiting for the unknown who can say something. One is that he infuses freshness into the magazine—as vital to it as pure air to the lungs. Charles Battell Loomis used to say that for every manuscript written there was a waiting editor—the only problem a writer had was to find the editor.

The "Big Name" Fallacy

"One of the greatest fallacies in making magazines," Mr. Lorimer continued, "is the 'big name' fallacy. When you get a good story under a big name you have the ideal combination. But when you have the big name and a bad story you simply disappoint the high expectations of your readers. I should always prefer a good story by an unknown man to a moderately good story by Kipling. Of course a big name stands for

BRAZIL'S PRESIDENT-ELECT WON HIGHEST OFFICE WHILE AWAY FROM HIS COUNTRY

Brazil and the Brazilians, to Say Nothing of Dr. Pessoa Himself, Experienced Great Surprise When Ballots Were Counted.

WASHINGTON, June 27.

DOWN in Brazil, the newest of the American republics, they elect presidents by a different method than is practiced in the oldest of American republics. Politics are on a far different basis than in the United States. It is possible, for instance, to chose a man as the nation's chief executive without his knowing a thing about it. That's what happened to Dr. Epitacio Pessoa, president-elect of another United States—the United States of Brazil—who has just arrived in this country after being lavishly entertained, not to say feted, by the rulers and the ruled of nearly all the leading European countries.

Upon the death of Rodrigues Alves last January it was necessary, under the Brazilian Constitution, to call an election for the choice of a new President. Herein lies another dissimilarity between the systems of government in the Northern and Southern American continents. Brazil has a Vice President, just as the United States has, but she has gone even further than this country in concealing his identity. His shoulders are not intended for the mantle of the presidency, even in case of death. So another election was held, on April 13, and when the final count of the ballots showed Epitacio Pessoa to be the successful candidate, Brazil and Brazilians experienced one of the greatest political surprises of the country's 20 years' existence as a republic. But the most thoroughly surprised person of all, apparently, was Epitacio Pessoa himself.

Dr. Pessoa had been sent to Paris as the head of Brazil's peace delegation. He had championed the league of nations, he had said several things about the cause of Pan-Americanism, he had fought for Brazil's retention of the German ships seized in her harbors—in short, he had demeaned himself in a manner calculated to meet the hearty approval of his countrymen. But Dr. Pessoa, modest and merely seeking to fulfill the duties of a patriotic statesman, did not consider his achievements had been starting in their brilliancy. And then, one fine morning, he received a cablegram from home. It contained the brief announcement, "Congratulations." Its brevity was exceeded only by its cryptic character. Dr. Pessoa thought that perhaps his stand with regard to the league of nations had become known at home and was meeting approval. Another cable arrived. In the second message the cause for congratulations was equally baffling. Finally there came a cable announcing his election to the presidency. While absent from the country, he had won a race initiated by the folks at home. No campaigning, no stump speaking, not even cigars for the boys in the fifth ward. He had left Rio de Janeiro with no idea of even becoming a candidate.

Such a victory has immense advantages, according to Dr. Pessoa.

Has a Free Hand

"Now I can enter office bound by no political promises," he said in Paris, when told of his unusual triumph. "I will have a free hand to work out my own program."

Dr. Pessoa's popularity in Brazil, and the success with which he has served his country in various capacities, may well be gauged by this remarkable ascendancy to the President's chair, despite the fact that never before had he been considered as a presidential candidate. Dr. Pessoa's victory, however, was not gained without aid from the tricks which politics play. There are no clearly defined lines of political demarcation in Brazil. Parties do not exist as they are known in this country. Politics tend to revolve about personalities rather than principles. At election time organizations with some resemblance to political parties may arise about the personalities who are the central figures in the contest, but they have little permanent status.

When talk began about a successor to Rodriguez Alves, it was generally conceded that Dr. Ruy Barbosa, veteran Brazilian statesman, orator and writer, Minister of Finance in the Provisional Government at the time of the empire's fall, and one of the most prominent characters in Brazil today, would be one of the candidates. But Barbosa, like every outstanding personality in a nation's politics, had his opponents. Two opposing factions were untiring in their efforts to find candidates who could defeat him. Failing to find the suitable material, unable to agree upon a single candidate from their own forces, and concluding that with three men in the field the path to victory would be all the smoother for Barbosa, they decided to compromise. Perhaps they recalled a certain American election in 1912. At any rate, the result was Epitacio Pessoa, a man from the outside, from the northeastern State of Parahyba do Norte, which previously had scarcely been considered in supplying men for the President's chair. Whatever is the Brazilian term for "dark horse"—that was the role unknowingly filled by the man who is today the guest of the American nation. Pessoa, in Paris, was elected; Barbosa, in Rio, was beaten.

A Youthful President

As may be assumed from the fact that he was chosen to head Brazil's peace delegation, Dr. Pessoa's past has been filled with distinguished performance. His selection for the presidency was based on more than political reasons. In the first place, his rise in life is considered exceptional because of his youth, presidentially speaking. He is 52 years old. Barbosa, the vanquished, is in the seventies. Like so many political leaders in our own country, Dr. Pessoa gained the start of a successful career through his legal abilities. After being graduated from the law school at Pernambuco, he began practice in his native state, became secretary to the Governor, and when the Republic was proclaimed in 1889 was chosen as a representative to the first Federal Assembly in Rio de Janeiro. At that time he was in his early thirties. Despite his youth, he played an active part in framing the constitution, which was modeled in 1891 after the Constitution of the United States. After serving in the Assembly for a few years, Dr. Pessoa went to Europe, where he studied languages, customs and the modes of economic and political life. That was in the day when leading South Aemricans, washing to travel and gain new thoughts from abroad, almost invariably sought their ideas across the Atlantic, not from their neighbor on the north. That condition is changed today, and will remain so, it is believed.

Upon his return from Europe, Dr. Pessoa was named Minister of Justice and the Interior. In this office, which has charge of educational affairs, he distinguished himself by effecting sweeping reforms in public instruction. New laws for the schools were created, standards of curricula were improved and higher class teachers were employed.

Dr. Pessoa's next step toward Brazilian fame came with his appointment to the Supreme Court at Rio de Janeiro, where the keenness of his judicial mind won him prominence in all parts of the country. Four or five years ago he retired and was elected Senator to the National Assembly, which post he retained until his appointment to the peace conference. In the Senate Dr. Pessoa played an active part in the revision of the constitution last year, when new civil codes were introduced with the view of removing certain difficulties which Brazil faced in her problem of "state rights." Many of the articles, it is said, were improved through his suggestions.

A Fluent Speaker

Dr. Pessoa is chiefly characterized, say people who know him, by the fluency and forcefulness of his speaking ability. He is described as being dignified in manner, strong-willed and of an impressive appearance.

When the inaugural banquet was given for the presentation of the late president and the Vice President, Dr. Pessoa acted as toastmaster. At that time he declared that the northern part of Brazil had been neglected by the national Government and expressed hope that the new administration would devote greater attention toward its development. Now that Dr. Pessoa, unexpectedly, has been granted the opportunity of promoting the industrial and agricultural life of his own part of the country, he has indicated that a movement along these lines will form an important phase of his national policy. In this connection, he has proposed drawing upon the mechanical skill of the United States.

Brazil's greatest problem is economic, Dr. Pessoa has said, adding that Brazil "could feed the world," if her production at home was stimulated. In the United States, he plans to study the methods of raising and ginning cotton and the newest systems of irrigation. Many of Brazil's natural resources are still undeveloped; much of her land is uncultivated. By adapting American ideas of irrigation, the new President hopes to redeem nine of Brazil's northeastern states, which are highly fertile, but are injured every two or three years by the devasta-

THIN, NERVOUS PEOPLE NEED BITRO-PHOSPHATE

What It Is and How It Increases Weight, Strength and Nerve Forces in Many Instances

Says Editor of "Physicians' Who's Who."

Take plain bitro-phosphate is the advice of these physicians to thin, delicate, nervous people who lack vim, energy and nerve force, and ther seems to be ample proof of the efficiency of this preparation to warrant the recommendation. Moreover, if we judge from the countless preparations and treatments which are continually being advertised for the purpose of making thin people fleshy, developing arms neck and bust, and replacing ugly hollows and angles by the soft curved lines of health and beauty, there are evidently thousands of men and women who keenly feel their excessive thinness.

Thinness and weakness are often due to starved nerves. Our bodies need more phosphate than is contained in modern foods. Physicians claim there is nothing that will supply this deficiency so well as the organic phosphate known among druggists as bitro-phosphate, which is inexpensive and is sold by Judge & Dolph, Enderle Drug Stores, Johnson Bros.' Drug Co., Wolff-Wilson Drug Co., in St. Louis, and most all druggists under a guarantee of satisfaction or money back. By feeding the nerves directly and by supplying the body cells with the necessary phosphoric food elements, bitro-phosphate should produce a welcome transformation in the appearance; the increase in weight frequently being astonishing.

Clinical tests made in St. Catherine's Hospital, N. Y. C., showed that two patients gained in weight 23 and 27 pounds respectively, through the administration of organic phosphate; both patients claim they have not felt as strong and well for the past twelve years.

Increase in weight also carries with it a general improvement in the health. Nervousness, sleeplessness and lack of energy, which nearly always accompany excessive thinness, should soon disappear, dull eyes ought to brighten and pale cheeks glow with the bloom of perfect health.

Physicians and hospitals everywhere are now recognizing its merits by its use in ever increasing quantities. Frederick Kolle, M. D., editor of New York Physicians' "Who's Who," says: "Bitro-Phosphate should be prescribed by every doctor and used in every hospital to increase strength and nerve force and to enrich the blood."

Joseph D. Harrigan, Former Visiting Specialist to North Eastern Dispensatory, says: "Let those who are weak, thin, nervous, anaemic, or run down, take a natural, unadulterated substance such as bitro-phosphate, and you will soon see some astonishing results in the increase of nerve energy, strength of body and mind and power of endurance."

Bitro-Phosphate is made entirely of the organic phosphate compound referred to in the National Standard Dispensatory as being an excellent tonic and nervine and a preparation which has recently acquired considerable reputation in the treatment of neurasthenia. The standard of excellence, strength and purity of its substance is beyond question, for every Bitro-Phosphate tablet is manufactured in strict accordance with the U. S. Pharmacopeia test requirements. Bitro-Phosphate is therefore not a patent medicine and should not be confused with any of the secret nostrums, so-called tonics or widely advertised "cure-alls."

CAUTION—Although Bitro-Phosphate is unsurpassed for relieving nervousness, sleeplessness and general weakness, owing to its tendency to increase weight it should not be used by anyone who does not desire to put on flesh.—ADV

EVERY DIVISION ALONG THE RHINE HAS A NEWSPAPER

the bad taste of the fighting will be gone, and our life in the Army of Occupation will be fresh in our minds. Are we going to be the mouthpiece of the German propaganda system?

"At the present time there are in the United States hundreds of infant enterprises manufacturing articles and products that were formerly imported from Germany. The success or failure of these enterprises depends on what legislative action is taken against the importation of certain articles from Germany.

"Retain the opinion formed of the Germans when the Lusitania was sunk, or the first time you went over the top—for such opinions were and are right.

"Remember, we are dealing with a nation that has no claim to sympathy, and we cannot form a correct opinion of that nation from the treatment accorded us by a few fawning and, in most cases, hypocritical individuals."

The Sentinel says, on the same matter:

"Our officers and soldiers are billeted, and nearly every man in the division has a bed, a real, sure-enough bed all to himself. There is no wonder that some forget the heroic France for the placid Germany.

"And the people. Not the real, dyed-in-the-wool Prussians, but the Germans of the Palatinate. For the most part people who will get along well under any Government, whether it be German, French or independent. No wonder that, at times, someone feels that these people are not so bad, after all, and that they deserve sympathy.

"But taking all of these things into consideration, we feel that there is no cause for alarm, that the men of this command are "falling for" any propaganda, and that they are beginning to take sides with the Germans.

"It may be true that we will not go back to America singing the praises of all that we saw in France. It is true that the great majority of us will go back to America with plans already made to visit again the land in which, and for which, we fought."

And the Watch on the Rhine, replying to assertions made by a woman worker of the Y. M. C. A., says:

"The men of the Army of Occupation are not mealy-hearted, impressionable boys, ignorant of German character, ready to be deceived by German friendliness. They accept German advances for what they are worth; which is but natural. Life on the Rhine is difficult enough for them without making it more difficult by repelling German attentions, and reminding Germans eternally of their battlefield atrocities, and their lying diplomacy. The American is notoriously good-natured, but the German has found to his sorrow that this good nature cannot be imposed upon. It requires but an arrogant look, a slighting word, to revive battlefield memories, and the boche suffers physical punishment at the hands of these pampered Americans."

PRESIDENT-ELECT OF BRAZIL WON HIGH HONORS WHILE AWAY

tion of drouth. By importing American cotton gins, Dr. Pessoa believes he can improve the quality of Brazilian cotton as it is prepared for the market. He has proposed, if possible, to induce American industrial experts to accompany him to Brazil. Dr. Pessoa declared in Paris that with the growth in commercial and social intercourse between North and South America during the war an immense increase in the relations of Brazil and the United States was inevitable. To cement these relations will be part of his mission to this country.

In the parts of the United States which President Pessoa and his wife and daughter will visit, full programs for their reception are being arranged. Dr. Pessoa will be the guest of the American nation and will return from this country to Brazil on a United States battleship. The greeting will have to be most elaborate, however to exceed the honors which were accorded him during his tour of European countries. In England, France, Belgium, Italy and Portugal he was received with the highest marks of esteem. The audience and reception of Dr. Pessoa and his wife and daughter by Pope Benedict marked an event in the relations of the Vatican with foreign countries without precedent since the fall of temporal power. For the first time the Pope received a Catholic head of a Catholic state who was the guest of the King of Italy. In the past the Pope had declined to receive such visitors.

Dr. Pessoa was greeted at the station in Rome by King Emmanuel, Queen Helena and the members of the Italian cabinet. At the Brussels station he was met by King Albert and the Queen, while in London he was welcomed by the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the King, and by leading representatives of the British Government.

In the United States the reception to Dr. Pessoa will be that tendered by the greatest Republic in North America to the head of the largest Republic in South America—a greeting from one America to another.

To Dedicate Outdoor Auditorium.

The opening of the new outdoor auditorium in the Wyman School yard, Park and Theresa avenues, Wednesday, will be the occasion for a patriotic program, which will include a concert by the Jefferson Barracks Band, dances by school children and a series of 15 living tableaux posed by members of the Parent-Teachers Association.

PACKING PLANT TO KILL HORSES

Product Will Be Marketed Exclusively in Foreign Countries.

HUTCHINSON, Kan., June 28.—The local branch of the Lincoln Packing Co. is to engage exclusively in the slaughtering of horses for export trade, it has been announced by E. U. Engler, acting manager.

"This plant will be the only packing house in the United States, as far as we have been able to ascertain, to engage exclusively in horse meat," said Manager Engler. "We will have a capacity for about 300 head daily. The horses will be obtained from all over the West and Northwest. The meat will be cured and packed in barrels and boxes for foreign trade; none will be marketed in this country. A number of other plants in the West slaughter horses, but none exclusively."

Indigestion, Gas and Bloat From Acid-Stomach

An acid-stomach cannot digest food properly. Instead, the food sours and ferments and, passing into the intestines, becomes a breeding place for countless millions of deadly germs—toxic poisons they are called. These poisons are absorbed into the system and cause untold misery. So, you see, it is just acid-stomach, nothing else—that makes so many people weak, listless and unfit; saps their strength and energy, robs them of their vigor and vitality. Biliousness, bad liver, nervousness, blinding, splitting headaches, rheumatism, lumbago, sciatica—these and many other still more serious ailments often are traced to the common source—an acid-stomach.

Take EATONIC and get rid quickly of the pains of indigestion, heartburn, that horrible, lumpy, bloated feeling after eating; disgusting, belching, food-repeating; sour, gassy stomach. These stomach miseries are caused by what doctors call "Hyperacidity." It's just ACID-STOMACH. And in addition to the pains and miseries it causes, ACID-STOMACH is the starter of a long train of ailments that most people never dreamed are in any way connected with the stomach.

Pleasant tasting EATONIC TABLETS that you eat like a bit of candy, quickly put an end to your stomach troubles. They act as an absorbent—literally wipe up the excess hurtful acid and make the stomach pure, sweet and strong. Help digestion so that you get all the power and energy from your food. You cannot be well without it!

If you are one of those who have "tried everything" but in spite of it still suffer all kinds of acid-stomach miseries—if you lack physical and mental strength and vigor—begin at once to take EATONIC. Get back your physical and mental punch and enjoy the good things of life. Like thousands of others you will say you never dreamed that such amazingly quick relief and such a remarkable improvement in your general health was possible.

Your druggist has EATONIC. We authorize him to guarantee it to give you instant relief or refund your money. Get a big box of EATONIC today, it costs but little and the results are wonderful!

Free Book on Drink Habit

A well-known New Yorker, addicted to drink habit for 16 years, found it was putting him in the human scrap heap, like thousands of others are ruined. Now he is completely free from the habit and tells about a quick and lasting remedy in a book that he has published.

This book contains information of vital interest to drinkers, their wives and others who have tried in vain to conquer the habit by persuasion, pledges or medicines. It is not a temperance lecture, but an easy-reading narrative, well illustrated. The author, Edward J. Woods, D D-27, Station F, New York City, will send it free, in plain wrapper, postpaid. The method is easy, safe and genuine; endorsed by physicians.—ADV

Makes Wrinkles Go "As If by Magic"

Want to banish every wrinkle—from face, neck, hands—easily, quickly, completely? Try the famous saxolite formula. Nothing else so nearly meets every requirement. Why? Because it is correct in principle and really, truly assists Nature. Possessing remarkable astringent and tonic properties, it both tightens the skin—thus naturally smoothing out the lines—and improves capillary circulation and nerve tone—tending to strengthen loose tissue and bring about a healthy condition. Yet, powerful as the saxolite lotion is, it won't harm your skin in the least. And it's so easy to get the inexpensive ingredients at your druggist's, and so easy to mix them.

Just dissolve one ounce powdered saxolite in one-half pint witch hazel—that's all. Bathe your face in this—immediately every wrinkle and crease are affected, even the deepest. You are perfectly astonished and delighted with the result. You look like you've lost years from your age!—ADV.

PROMINENT MEXICAN HELD AS SMUGGLER

Arrest n New York of George Henriquez on Opium Charge Causes Surprise.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LAREDO, Tex.—Business men in Mexico, especially the American and British element, were greatly surprised at recent news from New York that George Henriquez was under arrest in that city on a charge of smuggling opium. In the days before the world war Henriquez was the representative in Mexico of several large British industrial establishments. He was well known to many business men of that country.

The arrest of Henriquez was effected at the instance of the United States customs authorities at Laredo. It is alleged that he smuggled 90 cans of opium across the border. The contraband shipment was contained in cans of castor oil. The discovery of the scheme was made and the shipment was intercepted at Galveston. It is said to have been destined to New York. The cans of opium were cleverly set in the larger cans containing castor oil.

Henriquez will be brought to Texas for trial. It is the expressed belief of Government customs agents that plans have been on foot for some time for smuggling large quantities of opium from Mexico. The recent resumption of regular steamship traffic between points in Japan and China and ports on the Pacific Coast of Mexico has paved the way for extensive smuggling operations, it is asserted.

There has been some apprehension that the airplane may be adopted for carrying contraband goods into the United States. Reports of alleged violations of the custom laws by this means have come to the border authorities from time to time during the last few months, but as yet no authentic cases of such violations have been established.

"GIVE US MORE POLLYANNAS," SAYS GEORGE HORACE LORIMER

achievement and the ability to achieve again. That is why the unknowns keep seeing them in the magazines. But every now and then some very sad manuscript comes from the great, and once they get that fatal disease of the author, delusions of grandeur, and think that the public is going to swallow anyting they write, it is all bad. The most telling successes that we have ever had have been with stories by unknown or anonymous writers. Sooner or later those authors have become 'big names.'

"Commissioning stories is a bad practice—bad alike for the author and the magazines—that America has imported from England. Tying up authors on contract is a worse one that we have developed at home. The first means that a magazine is being edited haphazard by 50 men instead of consistently by one. The second means another headstone in some publisher's private graveyard.

"It is the first business of an editor to make other men write, not to write himself. There are three places where new authors show oftenest. First, they happen in the daily mail. In this way came to us Montague Glass, George Randolph Chester, Peter B. Kyne and a host of others. They came unheralded, unknown, without letters of introduction, pull or acquaintance of any sort. They pushed open the door of the editorial rooms with a 2-cent stamp, got a prompt hearing, a prompt acceptance, a check and an invitation to call again. For it is not only the first business of an editor to make men write, but it is the first business of his readers to find every possibility. The unpardonable sin is letting a new man of promise get away. The value of his readers to an editor depends altogether on their ability to discover new talent, either developed or potential.

"If they find no new writers they can hunt a new job, so the young author can be assured that he is the object of their tenderest solicitude.

"A second source of new magazine writers is the daily press. The development of promising men is watched by us. From time to time we invite them to try their luck with us. So it came about that Irvin Cobb, David Graham Phillips, Samuel G. Blythe, Will Payne and many others renounced the steady job and the weekly pay envelope to browse in periodical pastures.

The Rewards of the Writer

"A third source of supply is the friendly contributor, because I find that most successful men are sincerely anxious to help others up. So, often a man who is in writes me about some one that is out, who he thinks should be in. That red-blooded, big-hearted, allround good fellow, Charles E. Van Loan, first called my attention to Ring Lardner and a number of others who have made good in a big way.

"The men who have the best chance with us are total strangers; we are inclined to lean back a little from our friends—afraid that we may take our liking for them as a liking for their stories. But even our friends have a chance.

"The rewards of the successful writer are greater today than they have ever been. It is a good thing to have money—clean money—and when it has been gained in a high and useful calling it brings a satisfaction that money alone cannot buy. In the end the printing press is always stronger than the men who serve it. A senseless mass of steel, it yet has a personality that subordinates the personalities of men to it and demands high purpose of those who would use it. Only to those who serve it honestly are its rewards given in turn, and of these rewards money is simply an incident."

Doctor Tells How to Detect Harmful Effects of Tobacco

Try These SIMPLE TESTS

New York: Doctor Connor, formerly of Johns Hopkins Hospital, says: Many men who smoke, chew or snuff incessantly and who are seemingly healthy are suffering from progressive organic ailments. Thousands of them would never have been afflicted had it not been for the use of tobacco, and thousands would soon get well if they would only stop the use of tobacco. The chief habit-forming principle of tobacco is nicotine, a deadly poison which, when absorbed by the system, slowly affects the nerves, membranes, tissues and vital organs of the body. The harmful effect of tobacco varies and depends on circumstances. One will be afflicted with general debility, others with catarrah of the throat, indigestion, constipation, extreme nervousness, sleeplessness, loss of memory, lack of will power, mental confusion, etc. Others may suffer from heart disease, bronchial trouble, hardening of the arteries, tuberculosis, blindness or even cancer or the common affliction known as tobacco heart. If you use tobacco in any form you can easily detect the harmful effects by making the following simple tests: Read aloud one full page from a book. If in the course of reading your voice becomes muffled, hoarse and indistinct, and you must frequently clear your throat, the chances are that your throat is affected by catarrh and it may be the beginning of more serious trouble. Next, in the morning before taking your usual smoke, walk up three flights of stair at a regular pace, then stop. If you find that you are out of breath, your heart beat is forced, trembling or irregular, you may be a victim of functional or organic heart trouble. If you feel that you must smoke, chew or snuff to quiet your nerves, you are a slave to the tobacco habit, and are positively poisoning yourself with the deadly drug, nicotine. In either case you have just two alternatives—keep on with the self-poisoning process irrespective of the dangers and suffer the consequences, or give up the habit and escape the dangers. You can overcome the craving and stop the habit in a very short time by using the following inexpensive formula: Go to any drug store and ask for Nicotol tablets, take one tablet after each meal, and in a comparatively short time you will have no desire for tobacco, the craving will have left you. With the nicotine poison out of your system your general health will quickly improve.

Note—When asked about Nicotol tablets, one of our leading druggists said: "It is truly a wonderful remedy for the tobacco habit; away ahead of anything we have ever sold before. We are authorized by the manufacturers to refund the money to every dissatisfied customer, and we would not permit the use of our name unless the remedy possessed unusual merit." Nicotol tablets are sold in this city under an iron-clad money-back guarantee by all up-to-date druggists, including the Judge & Dolph, Wolff-Wilson and the Enderle Stores.—ADV.

INDUSTRIAL ARTS AND CRAFTS EXHIBIT IN FALL

St. Louis Art League Begins Movement for Development Following War.

Blazing the path for a greater America in the applied arts, the St. Louis Art League announces the St. Louis Exposition of Industrial Arts and Crafts, to be held four weeks, commencing Oct. 15, in the Southern Hotel building. A bulletin setting forth the complete plan of the project will be out tomorrow for broadcast distribution.

Craftsmanship having suffered in this country during the war from a dearth of applied art, the Art League, having in mind America's needs, now that this country will bid for the world's commerce, expects through the exposition to start a movement for systematic and intensive development of this phase of the nation's needs.

In this exposition will be shown art in its various relations to the world of commerce, with the idea of stimulating craftsmanship and developing the American style so that "Made in America" shall be synonymous with beauty as well as utility, and on the ground that Americanization can best be attained through the arts as the highest form for inoculating American ideals.

Advantage in World Trade.

It is pointed out that, since the war is over, all the manufacturing countries will strive to attain a degree of perfection in artistic manufacture as one means to invite world trade, and that the nation that first attains this end will naturally have a tremendous advantage in establishing itself in the world's marts.

The St. Louis exposition is expected to be the forerunner of an American national exposition, such as France is already planning, the announcement having come from Paris that a national exposition of the applied arts will be held a few years hence in one of the devastated areas of the Paris district.

Charles D. Platt, director of the St. Louis exposition, said that since England, France, Germany and Japan had always used intensive thought and effort in the applied arts, the United States must start development quickly along this line if it expects to cope with these nations for world commerce.

Illustration in Automobile.

"The automobile is a good illustration of what applied art does for commerce," Platt explained. "There was a time when little attention was given to design, but today a car's chief selling point is its lines. That is design, and design is applied art. The same can be said of almost every manufactured article—its utility creates the need, its design attracts the buyer and gives it the preference in competition.

"Hitherto America has devoted too little attention to art as applied to industry by other nations, which has given them an advantage of us in world trade. We have very few schools as compared to the importance of the nation as a manufacturer for the world, and our exposition here, followed by a national exposition, should result in the establishment of more schools of applied art and a marked improvement in craftsmanship."

Open to Whole Country.

Processes as well as still exhibits will be shown, and although mostly industries in this territory will show examples of what they are doing, Platt said, any American manufacturer may have a display.

The Art League itself will have a large room where it will show what it is doing for community service arts, music, the drama, pageantry and interpretive dancing. The other applied art displays will include architecture, building materials, house furnishings, lighting devices, floral displays, the graphic arts, art metals, art fabrics, including fashions; leather novelties, art furniture, hardware, labels, laces and embroideries, printing, lithography, glass products, pottery, art tiles, ornamental metals, plastic relief, photography, automobile accessories, saddlery, art shoes, fancy goods, terra cotta, woodenware, upholstery and virtually all the decorative arts.

The exposition has been approved by the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations, all the members of which have pledged their support.

FLAT CAR WHEELS TOO NOISY

Hospital Superintendent to Start Campaign to Obtain Quiet.

Dr. Rolla Henry, superintendent of the city hospital, announced yesterday that he is going to start a campaign against street and neighborhood noises, in which the Police Department will be asked to co-operate. There is a city ordinance against loud noise in the vicinity of hospitals, and street signs are posted to that effect, but Dr. Henry said that these notices are disregarded.

There is a sharp and noisy curve at Fourteenth street and Lafayette avenue, where the Tower Grove cars turn, and Tower Grove line flat wheels are notorious. Motor cycles passing the hospital are another particular source of noise.

A large amount of vehicular traffic uses Twelfth street only to Park avenue, then goes over Fourteenth street, a very narrow thoroughfare, to Lafayette avenue, a route physical features of which necessitate more noise than usual from automobiles.

One of the Reasons—

SANITATION

There are a great many reasons why progressive merchants are installing HUSSMANNS. One of the greatest reasons is SANITATION. Under improper displaying and cooling facilities meat becomes a carrier of disease-breeding germs.

When openly displayed, especially during warm weather, it is subject to bacteria carried by flies, insects and vermin.

Then, too, handling of provisions by thoughtless persons possibly affected by contagious diseases, is a danger of no little concern. Coughing and sneezing should not come in contact with edibles.

PAROLED CONVICTS NOT NOTIFIED OF THEIR DISCHARGE

Twenty-Six From Texas Penitentiary Lost Sight of When Not Reported by Those to Whom Released.

OFFICIAL RECORDS ARE NOT COMPLETE

State Board Investigates Cases of 114 Prisoners and Recommends New Legislation to Governor.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

AUSTIN, Tex.—An investigation by the State Board of Pardons into the status of 114 penitentiary convicts who were paroled between the years 1905 and 1917 reveals that many of this number may have reached the "port of missing men." There is no record of to whom 26 of them were paroled, or what became of them, and many others. So far as known they may be working to this day on some plantation in a condition of peonage. The record shows that the penitentiary authorities discharged 45 of those under parole when their sentences were ended, but as their whereabouts were lost sight of they were not officially made aware of the fact that they were no longer convicts.

The report of the Board of Pardons to Gov. W. P. Hobby says, in part:

"We have gone through all data pertaining to paroled convicts to be found in the Governor's office, the Secretary of State's office and the State penitentiary at Huntsville, and we found a great task confronting us. In years past and gone by there was no system whereby a complete record was kept by any department handling the records of paroled convicts. As early as we could find any record was in 1905. Those records were incomplete from that date down to 1916. Since 1916 the penitentiary system has a complete record of all paroled convicts and those that have been paroled since 1916 are in easy touch with the proper offices at Huntsville, and their records are complete. From December, 1905, to December, 1916, we find paroled 114 convicts. A large per cent of these convicts are negroes and Mexicans and a few white men.

Records Incomplete.

"Out of these 114 we find that there is no trace of the man to whom they were paroled. The records in the Governor's office and in the Secretary of State's office, and the penitentiary at Huntsville show that they were paroled, to whom 'unknown.' From all the data that we can gather we are not able to find to whom these 26 were paroled; for instance take convict No. 4339, by the name of Santiago Rodiguez, from Bexar county, Texas. The record shows that he was paroled on the fifteenth day of November, 1905, to whom 'unknown,' term life, now served 32 years, 4 months and 6 days, and is still on parole. We will undertake to locate these individuals and those deserving a pardon, will recommend same to your Excellency—but if not, we will make a thorough investigation if they can be located, as to the status and present condition and report to you later. As stated above we find from the date of November, 1905, to December, 1916, 114 convicts now on parole, which includes the above mentioned 26.

"There are 22 out of the 114 still on parole, 19 of whom the names are given to whom paroled. Those we will immediately make investigation of and report to your Excellency.

"There have been discharged 45. This is one of the embarrassing features that we find. When their time expired, they were marked up on the records at Huntsville as being discharged. No report was given as required by law, therefore the authorities at Huntsville were not in touch with these convicts when their time expired and were not able to give any notice. We take for granted that the parties who had these convicts under parole released them at the expiration of their term, but we will make an investigation of this matter the best we can and see that every convict whose time has expired gets his release.

"Forty-one have been pardoned; 23 received a full pardon, and 18 conditional pardons. These pardons were delivered and the paroled convicts discharged. One has died, four have escaped and one parole revoked—total, 114.

"As stated above, those that have been discharged concern us more than any other, for the reason that they have been lost sight of on account of the failure of the people who had these inmates paroled to make a report to the prison authorities, as required by law. This feature we especially call your Excellency's attention to, that a more rigid law be enacted forcing a monthly report to be made, and attaching a penalty thereto."

Golf Course as Soldiers' Memorial.

ASBURY, PARK, N. J.—Nine holes of an 18-hole golf course will be opened on a 200-acre tract here July 4 when the park will be dedicated as a memorial for Asbury Park soldiers and sailors in the world war. The park was recently purchased by the city as a war memorial. It has an aviation field, now being used as a landing station for an airplane making flights with summer visitors as passengers, and fields for tennis, baseball, etc. It has a wide frontage on Shark River.

Stomach is Quick to Upset When School Children Are Idle

VACATION days are days of over-eating and under-exercising for most boys and girls. They loll around nibbling at light food, unconcerned whether the fruit is green or ripe.

The result is cramps, skin eruptions, pimples, "summer colds," constipation and diarrhea. The basis of such trouble is an upset stomach, and nothing will give safer and quicker relief than the well-known Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It is just a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin, a formula evolved some 30 years ago by Dr. Caldwell himself. Syrup Pepsin is now used by millions of people and is today the largest-selling liquid laxative in the world.

It is the mildest and gentlest of laxatives. It regulates the stomach and bowels so well that they can soon work normally again without the aid of medicine. And unlike the harsher physics and cathartics, Syrup Pepsin does not gripe or cause discomfort, even to a tiny baby.

A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin can be bought at any drug store for 50c and $1, the latter the family size. A free trial bottle can be had by sending your address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 480 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

Famo Makes Women's Hair Grow Luxuriantly

Beautiful, healthy, lustrous new hair comes to the head on which FAMO is used regularly.

Women have reported to us that their hair grew as much as four to six inches a short time after they began using FAMO.

It also grows men's hair, even where baldness is beginning to appear.

Unless the hair roots are absolutely dead, FAMO will grow hair.

FAMO grows new hair because it destroys the seborrhea germ which is killing the hair.

The seborrhea bacilli go down into the glands and attack the hair roots.

Unless they are destroyed they will eventually kill the hair. With the germ at work the hair is fighting for its life.

Nature fights against disease. But it cannot conquer—alone. FAMO will give the necessary aid to assure a healthy scalp.

FAMO will destroy the dandruff bacilli and make the hair grow luxuriantly.

It stops all itching of the scalp. FAMO is the result of three years of scientific experimentation in one of the greatest pharmaceutical laboratories of Detroit.

Its ingredients have been well known to physicians for years but have never before been used on the head.

FAMO has accomplished wonderful results. Every member of the family should use it regularly. It contains no alcohol.

FAMO is sold at all toilet goods counters and applications may be had at the better barber shops and hair dressing establishments.

It comes in two sizes—a small size at 35 cents and an extra large bottle at $1. Your money will be refunded if you are not satisfied.

Seborrhea is the medical name for a morbidly increased flow from the sebaceous glands of the scalp. The seborrhean excretion forms in scales or flakes and is commonly known as dandruff.

1,300,000 ALIENS MAY BE EXPECTED TO QUIT AMERICA

And They Will Take With Them Nearly $4,000,000,000, Department of Labor Expert Says.

MINES AND STEEL CITIES TO SUFFER

Forthcoming Exodus Will Come as a Result of War's End and Changed European Conditions.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—At least 1,300,000 aliens, carrying with them nearly $4,000,000,000, may be expected to leave the United States as the result of changed European conditions, according to Ethelbert Stewart of the Department of Labor, who has been investigating the prospects of an immigration in the industrial centers of the East and Middle West.

The coal mines and the steel cities of Pennsylvania will be heavy sufferers, added Mr. Stewart who has made a careful study of the situation in the various sections of the State.

"A very conservative estimate," asserted Stewart, "of the number who will return I place at 1,300,000, and this is in excess of the ordinary outgo of aliens. There are something like 450,000, mostly Italians, who have come to our shores in the early spring of each year, worked until fall and returned to Italy. This migratory group has not been considered in my investigation.

"Inasmuch as these aliens have not been able to send money home for four years, they are for the most part provided with ample funds, and the investigation and inspection service estimates that the average amount each one will carry with him is about $3000. The director of the investigation and inspection service is in receipt of communications every day from various journals printed in foreign languages, offering to do what they can to stem the returning tide of alien laborers."

The investigation is at present being conducted in the bituminous coal mining districts and Lawrence, Mass., Bridgeport, Conn., and a number of the New England towns. The population of these districts is largely alien and represents many nationalities.

From data collected in these centers from representative aliens of the various nationalities, estimates have been made of the percentage of aliens who propose to return to their home countries. These percentages are based on figures giving the number of aliens of each nationalities in the community and the number who contemplate returning to Europe.

Thus, of 163,498 Poles covered by the investigation 24,590, or 15.04 per cent will return to Poland.

In some cases the figures reported were only of the number of aliens who will return to their home countries and did not show what relation that number bore to the total population of the nationality in that community. The following figures are representative: Of the Austro-Hungarians covered, 28.02 per cent will return; Poles, 15.04 per cent; Russians, 35.70 per cent; Croatians, 21.75 per cent; Lithuanians, 9.72 per cent; Roumanians, 64.29 per cent; Italians and Greeks, 11 per cent; Serbs, 36.90 per cent; Slovaks, 34.50 per cent.

Stewart expects to get out a report on the coal fields and on Bridgeport, Conn., before his service goes out of existence.

SAUNDERS IN MEXICAN OFFICE

Former St. Louis Man Is Secretary of American Trade Body.

A message from Mexico City states that W. F. Saunders, formerly secretary of the Business Men's League of St. Louis, has arrived there to act as secretary of the recently reorganized American Chamber of Commerce. Numerous large concerns are represented and an energetic campaign for more business has been planned.

Competition for a share of Mexican import and export trade is keen because with the signing of the armistice English, French, Japanese, Spanish, Scandinavian and German representatives became active.

Dr. Claggett to Lecture Tonight.

"The Three Wise Men From the East, the Four Wise Men From the West," will be the subject of a lecture by the Rev. W. H. Clagett, D. D., at First Presbyterian Church, Washington boulevard and Sarah street, at 8 o'clock tonight. He will compare the three faithful wise men of the Bible with four Indians who nearly a century ago made their way across the Rocky Mountains to the East for the one purpose of getting "The White Man's Book of Heaven." The lecture will be accompanied by illustrations.

Germany's Figures Wrong.

PARIS.—German figures on the number of French prisoners held in Germany were found to be incorrect. Leon Abrami, Under Secretary in the Ministry of War, announced in the Chamber of Deputies. More than 50,000 French prisoners in excess of the German figures were found in Germany. The number of French soldiers missing in action has reached 314,000, the Under Secretary said.

STAY ON THE WATER WAGON!

If You Are One Who Has Quit Indulging in Strong Drink.

Cadomene Tablets Will Help You Over the Rough Period.

Cadomene Tablets are helpful to weak nerves. Weak, faulty nerves often come from strong drink. Sometimes the system is impoverished by excesses of one kind or another, such as poor digestion and faulty nutrition. Overwork, anxiety, and even grief causes abnormal nervous conditions. The strength of body declines. The strength of will power wanes. Nervousness and sleeplessness causes further weakness and loss of vitality. Years of faithful practice taught a great physician that the formula now used to make Cadomene Tablets would surely build up the health of his patients. Now, anyone can take this great medicine if needed. Mr. G. A. Hoover, R. R. No. 1, Reading, Pa., writes: "I am taking Cadomene Tablets with very gratifying results. Nervousness, overwork, and sleeplessness are my complaints."

Mr. Joe N. Herndon, 1645 Twenty-fifth st., Sacramento, Cal., writes: "I am using Cadomene Tablets and find a great improvement has been brought about in two days."

DIVERS HUNT FOR LOST TREASURE

Salvaging of Ships, Sunk by Submarines, Interesting, but Precarous Job.

LONDON.—There is a spice of adventure in the salvaging of steamers sunk by German raiders. Round the British Isles, in the Mediterranean and off the Murman coast are rich fields for the salvage service as well as private enterprise. In the North Sea the water is too deep to make any considerable success, but in shallower water not only cargoes but ships are being saved.

Some of the sunken vessels contain huge fortunes in gold or goods. One is known to have carried $5,000,000 in gold. The diver sent down to work on her borrowed the key to the ship's strong box but it is not recorded whether he retrieved the gold.

How to Save Ships.

If the divers decided to float the ship, barges are moored over her at low tide. Nine-inch wire ropes are then passed under it and fastened to the barges above. As the tide rises the barges rise with it, bringing the ship along, as it lies in the great wire cradle. The damaged ship is then towed into shallow water.

In the case of vessels only partly submerged compressed air is sometimes pumped into the hold, driving out the water while the ship floats to the surface. Occasionally it is necessary, where the hole is not too large to make a great patch, float it over the hole and then fasten it until the ship can be pumped out and floated.

Locomotives Save Ships.

One vessel was torpedoed in the channel, but almost reached the shore before it went down. When it finally sank it was exposed at low tide, and not so very far from a railroad. Heavy locomotives pulled the vessel into a perpendicular position and the vessel finally refloated.

While these salvage operations have been remuneratively successful, leaders in the industry declare that it is next to impossible to save a ship lying in water deeper than her masts, and that many ships never will be brought up. But they do not despair as to the cargo if the ship lies in less than 200 feet of water. Divers can operate with comparative ease at that depth.

Many sailors recently demobilized have cast their lot with the Government salvage corps or with some one of the private corporations which have taken up the work. The pay is good, while there is always an element of danger.

KEEPING LIQUOR MAY BE RISKY, NEWTON TELLS RIVERVIEW CLUB

Congressman Writes of Pending Bill to Enforce Prohibition Amendment.

The House Committee of Riverview Club recently wrote to Congressman Newton and asked if, in his opinion, it would be advisable to store a supply of liquor at the club for use after July 1.

Congressman Newton's reply follows:

"If the bill now before the Judiciary Committee is enacted into law, and in view of the strength of the Prohibition (blank) as here indicated, it will then, in my opinion, be a dangerous thing to have liquor stored in the club."

He enclosed a copy of the Volstead Bill, now pending before the Judiciary Committee, and directed attention to Sections 24 and 29.

Section 24 provides that any person who maintains a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, kept or bartered in violation of the bill or the War Prohibition Act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1000 and shall be imprisoned for not less than 30 days and not more than one year. The section also provides that any person owning a building used for that purpose shall be subject to a fine in which the property may be sold to pay the fine.

Section 29 provides that a search warrant may be issued to find liquor and that any liquor found shall be confiscated.

The House Committee will consider Congressman Newton's advice.

SERGEANT TESTIFIES HE SAW VAST ARMY STORES BURN

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Congressional investigation of wartime expenditures of the War Department was opened with Sergt. Charles B. Malcolm of Company L, Twenty-third Engineers, who has just returned from France, testifying that he had seen large quantities of Government property, both old and new, wantonly destroyed by fire.

"The only apparent explanation for burning this property," declared Malcolm, "was that the salvage officer did not care to sort the equipment."

The first was started last March between Souilly and Ippecourt and burned for about a month, Malcolm said, adding that in the last week of the month he personally saw about 700 pairs of new pants, 500 rifles in good condition, 25 unopened boxes of small arms ammunition, 800 pairs of old and new rubber boots, 200 leather holsters and 10 carloads of hay destroyed. After he made a report the fire ceased.

HURLEY SELLS SHIPS; PROFIT IS $3,600,000

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Nineteen big oil-burning steel cargo ships have just been sold to seven firms, to be operated by American owners under the American flag, the Shipping Board announced. The prices received ranged from $210 to $225 a deadweight ton, and they cost the Government from $178 to $198 a ton.

The purchase price aggregated $27,821,120, the total tonnage sold being 128,472. The profit to the Government was approximately $3,600,000. Six of the ships went to a single firm and four to another. All the buyers were Eastern concerns.

"The purchasers," said Mr. Hurley, "will get immediate possession and will place them in trade routes without delay."

First, remove mud, dust, etc., from your car by washing with water in the usual way.

If you have used oils, or wax, it is best to use Ivory Soap to remove them.

Pour about 4 ounces of O-Cedar in a pan and add a quart of warm water. Saturate a clean cloth in this and go over the body of the car. Do not attempt to clean too much at a time—take one side of the body or a fender first. Follow by rubbing with a dry cloth. But little rubbing is required to produce a hard, dry, lasting lustre.

ARMY TO STUDY ROAD CONDITIONS IN 60-DAY TOUR

A 3,000,000 Candle Power Searchlight to Be Exhibited on Trip.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—To promote co-operation between the Government and local good roads associations, the Motor Transport Corps of the army will send 60 trucks on a tour from Washington to San Francisco, starting July 7. All the types of trucks used in the A. E. F. will be represented in the train. The personnel will include 10 officers and 225 of the transport corps. Running 50 to 60 miles a day, the train will complete the trip in about 60 days.

Capt. Bernard McMahan will be in command of the train. Col. A. Owen Seaman will accompany it as far as Chicago, and Brigadier-General Charles B. Drake, chief of the Motor Transport Corps, from Chicago to the coast.

H. C. Osterman, vice president of the Lincoln Highway Association, will precede the train as official pilot and make arrangements for its reception in the cities along the route.

A study of road conditions will be made, to form the basis of recommendations for highway improvement. An observation officer from the Air Service will go with the train to pick out possible landing fields for a transcontinental air mail route. At each of the 60 stops scheduled, a detachment from the Engineering Corps of the army will give public demonstrations. The chief exhibit will be the 3,000,000 candlepower arc searchlights which are able to hold an entire squadron of airplanes in view at an altitude up to 5000 feet.

From Gettysburg, Pa., the Lincoln Highway will be followed across the continent. This route runs through Iowa and Nebraska.

PRACTICAL PARAGRAPHS.

Aluminum Pistons and Carbon.

Owners of cars equipped with aluminum pistons should be very cautious about removing carbon deposits with oxygen, as the extreme heat generated by this operation is more then likely to melt the aluminum of the piston.

Lapping Pistons.

Many substances are used in the operation of lapping pistons. Among them are fine emery dust, ground glass and rotten stone, of which the latter gives best results. When the glass is used, there is always the possibility that some particles of it will become imbedded in piston of sylinder metal. Racing drivers use rotten stone, mixing a little cylinder oil with it to form a thin paste. In lapping the piston it should be given both a reciprocating and oscillating motion.

Speedometer Drive.

Don't forget the speedometer drive. This hard working part needs a little lubrication, a few drops of oil once a week and the average owner seldom remembers it. Given this little attention and the drive will operate quietly and for a long period without other care.

Wire Wheels.

Owners of cars fitted with wire wheels should give these parts weekly inspection for loose spokes. While the wire wheel is strong enough to resist astonishing shocks, nevertheless such a blow may loosen one or two of the spokes and such damage should be immediately repaired. Where the enamel has cracked off, paint should be applied to keep moisture from working its way in and inducing rust.

Proper Idling.

Owners of cars containing small bore six-cylinder engines sometimes complain of the difficulty of obtaining proper idling. The owner usually assumes that the carbureter is at fault. As a matter of fact the trouble is usually caused by the spark plug gaps being set too close. This causes the motor to roll when idling with all the symptoms of loading. By increasing the spark gaps and cleaning the plugs, the trouble will be cured.

BALKY STARTER.

When the starting motor stalls easily and fails to spin the crankshaft as it should, it is a safe bet that either the storage battery does not test up to the necessary 1275 or that the contact points of the line switch are not making proper contact.

ON BEING PREPARED.

One of the principal factors in doing good work of any sort lies in being prepared for the job you are going to tackle. This is something the new car owner often fails to realize. You cannot properly wash a car, grind the valves, clean a spark plug or do any of the other jobs necessary to keeping the car in good running order without being perfectly equipped for the work. By degrees the car owner collects the equipment to enable him to finish each job he tackles in a workmanlike and satisfactory manner.

WARPED VALVE STEMS.

If there is a lack of compression and on examination the valve heads seem clean and perfect, give the valve stems a careful looking over to see if they have not become warped by the intense heat of that part of the engine.

CHANGING TIRES.

For the man who wants to get maximum mileage from his tires, the habit of using a spare tire to afford regular changes, beginning at the right front and progressing around the car, is a valuable one to form. In this way each tire gets a week's rest in four, during which time it should be gone over carefully and have any cuts and abraisons vulcanized.

When the leather fan belt develops considerable slippage though it is reasonably tight, it is very probably because the rough side of the leather is against the pulley surface. The smooth side of the leather has a much greater traction adherence.

MO. AUTO CLUB OF ST. LOUIS CELEBRATES ITS FIRST BIRTHDAY

More Than 750 Persons Expected to Take Part in Parade Through City.

The first birthday of the Missouri Automobile Club of St. Louis will be celebrated today. Starting at 3 p. m., there will be a parade of members in their motor cars beginning at the club headquarters, 2333 South Jefferson avenue, north through the business district and west to Grand avenue. It will end at the Western Rowing Club, 5000 South Broadway, where at 5 p. m. there will be boat races followed by a dinner and a three-hour program of vaudeville entertainment. Members of the Western Rowing Club will compete in the races for cups given by the automobile club.

More than 750 members, their wives and sweethearts, are expected to attend. River patrols are to be furnished by the Government during the boat racing.

The club was organized June 13, 1918, with but eight members. On June 25 of this year the roster contained 1155 members, all of whom are motorists.

During its year of existence the Missouri Automobile Club, which started as the South Side Automobile Club, has taken part in a number of movements for the betterment of motoring in St. Louis and vicinity.

The club helped to defeat the bill to compel automobile owners to pay a driver's fee of $2 per annum and the bill to tax gasoline ½ cent per gallon. It has co-operated with city authorities and the police department in cleaning alleys of glass and obstructions, in reconstruction, repair and oiling of streets in all parts of the city. It brought about the reconstruction of the wedge at Jefferson, Gravois and Sidney streets, work on which is to start soon. It recommended smooth paved streets on Seventh street from Hickory to Market street and on Chouteau avenue from Fourth to Sarah streets, and the widening of Jefferson avenue from Park avenue to Chippewa street.

It was partly instrumental in having the branch State auto license office located in the city hall, urged the erection of a pedestrian bridge across the Des Peres River at Gravois avenue and, with the aid of the police department, removed standing freight cars from Broadway and Branch streets.

The officers of the club are now having the State coal oil inspection department investigate the quality and price of gasoline. Through the use of the radiator emblem members assist each other on the road and in three instances stolen cars have been thus recovered and many reports made of damage to members' cars during the absence of owners.

The 1919 officers of the club are H. P. Riefling, president; Albert von Hoffman, vice president; Sam Stein, secretary; W. F. Heinecke, treasurer. The directors are E. J. Hess, Robert E. Lee, Henry Menne and Frank J. Riefling. The club headquarters are at 2333 S. Jefferson avenue.

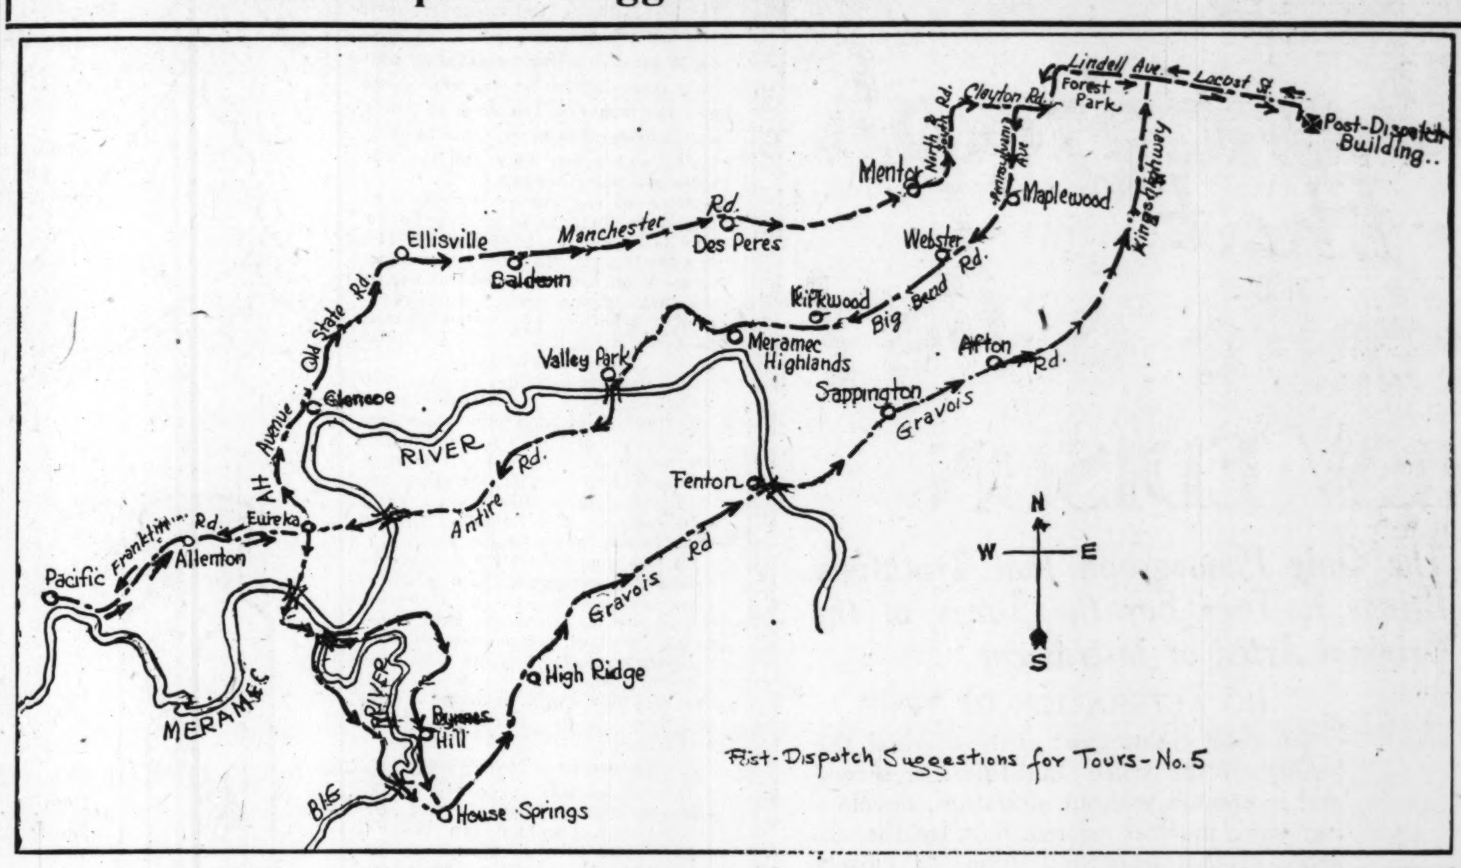
Post-Dispatch Suggestions for Tours—No. 5.



Swimming, Boating and Fishing at Motorist's Call on Tour to Pacific, Mo.

Roads Good Most of Way—Where They Are Rough Scenery Makes One Want to Continue—Air Cool Where Trees Overhang Road.

Shady nooks where the air is balmy and cool throughout the day are in abundance between St. Louis and Pacific, Mo., when touring by way of Valley Park, Eureka and Allenton. There are also at least six points that are passed or in the near vicinity of this route where motorists who carry their bathing suits with them may find places inviting for a plunge in the waters of both the Meramec and Big Rivers. Bathing suits are available at but few of the landings and gravel bars suitable for bathing.

The roads for the greater distance are hard surfaced and a pleasure to travel on but there are a few stretches of dirt road that show no signs of recent dragging that are enough to almost make one want to turn back if it were not for the beauty of the scenery that they control. One of the roughest stretches of the hard-surfaced roads traveled is on Big Bend road from Manchester road south through Maplewood to the Missouri Pacific Railway tracks. From Old Orchard on Big Bend road is in good repair.

The Barret Station road, though it shows no signs of recent repair is not in bad condition. The Dougherty Ferry road which is the first road to the left after passing Barrett Station is of stone base and smooth part way but of dirt construction for several miles beyond and rough, due to the heavy rains and lack of proper drainage. It then becomes better on entering Valley Park.

Antire road from Valley Park to Eureka has recently been resurfaced in stretches and while rough here and there passed through scenery of sufficient beauty to overcome what little displeasure may be had from unimproved stretches. The road from Eureka to Pacific is an improved road the greater distance and except for the fact that it fords two small streams is in good condition. The water is not more than six inches deep in either stream and the widest of the two is about ten feet.

The return trip to St. Louis can be made from Pacific by taking the road north from the Pacific bank to Manchester road, a distance of about four miles. As this stretch of road is reported rough and hilly it is preferable to return to Eureka and make the return trip to St. Louis from there over either of two routes, by way of Ellisville or House Springs, one being of approximately the same distance as the other and equally picturesque. The approximate distance from Eureka to St. Louis over either route is 31 miles. From St. Louis to Eureka, by way of Valley Park which is a shorter route, the distance is 28 miles. The roads from Eureka north through Glencoe and Ellisville to St. Louis are in better condition mile for mile than either of the two other routes, and if there has been any recent heavy rain when you plan your trip this is the route recommended. It follows the high line the greater way from Eureka north, yet descends into several beautiful valleys. An exceptionally beautiful view of the Meramec bottom lands and foothills of the Ozarks is had on the right between Glencoe and Ellisville. The roads are hardsurfaced and in good condition all the way, the rough stretches being short and few. This is the north route from Eureka. The south route by way of House Springs is in need of repair and rough for several miles south of the bridge across Big River where the Eureka road follows "The Narrows" of Big River, north and west of Byrnes Hill.

The scenery along "The Narrows" is very beautiful as the roadway follows along the river bank built in for some distance on the side of the bluff. The foliage is thick and overhanging shade trees keep the air cool throughout the day. At this point there is a small group of summer cottages and outing clubs owned privately. When the Big River is at the narmal stage fishing is said to be good and bathing afforded at many places where it is easy to get in and out on the gravel bottom. The remainder of the road to House Springs beyond "The Narrows" is reported fair. The Gravois road from House Springs is hard-surfaced all the way to St. Louis and maintained in good condition. The scenery is very pretty along this route which passes through High Ridge and Fenton.

The trip to House Springs can also be made by way of Brynes Hill by crossing the bridge near the mouth of Big River, continuing east for several miles then south, along the most traveled route. Campsites favorable to the needs of the motorist are available along this route, starting more than a mile east of the Big River bridge.

From Eureka the road after crossing the Meramec River continues south for several miles over a broad valley. From most any point along this stretch of road a very beautiful view of the bluffs along the Meramec River can be had. The bluffs, which are of white rock formation, stand several hundred feet high and constitute one of the most impressive views on the trip, the white of the stone and the green of the wooded stretches fringing the bluffs being in pretty contrast.

The St. Louis Children's Industrial Farm where children in groups of several hundred are taken from the congested districts of St. Louis during the summer months for a two weeks' outing in the country, is located on the outskirts of Eureka. The first group of more than 150 St. Louis children to visit the farm this season returned to St. Louis last week end. On the Meramec River south of Eureka there is a boat landing where swimming, boating and fishing are popular during this season. Big River also offers inducements to the pole and line fancier as well as suitable places for bathing and shady nooks for a family spread. In Eureka there is a drug store with soda fountain service and several places where home-cooked chicken dinners may be purchased. The route and a log of observations made in a tour over this route during the past week follows:

Mileage.

0.0. Post-Dispatch Building, north on Twelfth street to Locust, west to Skinker road, south to Clayton road. (The 100-yard stretch on Clayton road just west of Skinker road that was reported rough two weeks ago has since been repaired.) West to Pennsylvania avenue, south to Maplewood where Pennsylvania avenue joins Big Bend road. Pennsylvania avenue is of macadam construction and in good condition except for a stretch of several hundred feet north of Manchester road, where the road is rough. Continue south on Big Bend road through Maplewood. Road rough from Manchester road to Missouri Pacific railway tracks. Good beyond.

19.0—Valley Park. Station on left. Turn to left across railroad tracks at station, and continue through. Several restaurants in town and grocery stores are located near river for the patronage of canoeists. Boat landings and canoe clubs are located on both sides of the river where swimming and boating are afforded. Bathing suits and canoes may be rented at several of the Valley Park landings. Cross long iron bridge over Meramec River. Wheat on left. Corn on right. Turn to right at bluffs avoiding road straight ahead, which leads to Fenton. Summer cottages along south bank of Meramec in view on right. A tire sign at this point reads: "Mounds, silent memorials of a prehistoric people once were found here, but storms, the plow and the ignorance of destroying men have obliterated them." Follow poles. A covered spring on left. Ranken schoolhouse on right. Road winds left and right through with dense thicket on either side of road. Air cooled by foliage. Descend winding grade 23.9. Avoid road to left part way down grade 24.5 going up side of beautiful valley. Follow winding road over hilly country with many beautiful views. Curve left across long iron bridge over Meramec River 26.4. There is a gravel bar several hundred feet in length on the south bank of the river at this point where bathing is ideal. Persons who enjoy fishing will find many places along the river here that are attractive for the pole and line variety of the sport. Continue to right across broad valley made up principally of farm land. Cross railroad at Famous Station.

ST. LOUIS AUTO CLUB REVIVES RELIABILITY RUN FOR MOTORISTS

Pathfinder to Cover Route Early in August to Study Road Conditions.

The resolution of the Touring committee of the Automobile Club of St. Louis that the annual reliability tours held in former years be revived was passed favorably upon at a meeting of the Board of Governors Friday of this week.

C. B. Nicholson, vice chairman of the Touring Committee said the Board of Governors had authorized the Touring Committee to proceed with the arrangements for a 1919 reliability tour which it is planned to be held during the middle of October.

Nicholson said the pathfinders will probably not cover the course before August. The tour will include De Soto, Arcadia, Ste. Genevieve, Jackson, Cape Girardeau and return.

It has been three years since the Automobile Club of St. Louis has offered its members and the automobilists of St. Louis an opportunity to compete in the Reliability Tour, and it is believed that such an event held early in the month of October will meet with a hearty response from automobilists especially interested in touring.

The members of the Touring Committee of the Automobile Club are: Samuel Plant, chairman; C. B. Nicholson, vice chairman; Clifford H. Albers, R. E. Adreon, Roy F. Britton, John A. Bruner, Dr. W. H. Burritt, C. C. Crossman, George Harsh, E. J. Krause, E. A. Limberg, J. D. P. Lewis, George C. Mackay, Ferd P. Meyer, Matthew F. Morse, S. J. Pingree, Herman L. Schnure, Fred H. Semple, George J. Tansey, C. P. Van Graafeiland, W. R. Allen, George A. Bode, E. C. Zeller.

The tour will be open to all automobile owners and be run under practically the same rules and conditions that have governed these annual events of the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

NEWLY INVENTED AUTO APPLIANCES

Some of the latest inventions for motor car appliances that are shown in the July number of Popular Mechanics, follow:

Snow and ice auto which has a traction mechanism consisting of four egg-shaped drums mounted in place of the wheels. The surface of each drum carries a series of helical flanges, like a screw thread of exaggerated pitch, those on opposite sides of the car revolving in opposite directions, driven by chains from the engine shaft.

An ingenious tool for grinding engine valves consists essentially of a series of 18 tiny round files with very fine teeth. These are radially mounted, free to rotate in a small ring, forming a conical group. The ring is inserted in the valve seat, the valve is then centered in the ring, and revolved several times by means of a long twisted spindle, upon which a grooved sleeve is moved up and down. The whole operation is completed in three or four minutes.

An English automobile association has added a first aid service. A telephone call from any of its frequent wayside stations brings, if needed, a motor cycle with a stretcher-bearing side car, equipped for any emergency, from carrying a casualty to repairing a wrecked car.

A simple tool for spreading apart the beads of an auto tire which does the work with small effort consists of a long and short spreader jaw, hinged to a curved hand lever. When the spreader is inserted, by pushing the lever forward and down locks the tire in the open position. A larger model for truck tires is also made.

One of the motor sight-seeing bus lines operating in Washington, D. C., has equipped the roofs of their busses with thick clear glass, reinforced with fine mesh wire, so that the travelers in viewing tall monuments and public buildings will not have to put their heads out of the windows.

RIVER EXCURSION IS PLAN FOR JULY 25

The second annual river excursion of the Motor Accessory Trade Association of St. Louis is to be held the evening of July 25, on the new excursion steamer "J. S." President W. L. Ferrier has appointed a number of committees to handle the details of the affair to which the entire automobile trade of St. Louis and friends will be invited. Tickets for the excursion will be ready for distribution Monday and will be sold at 50 cents a person. The excursion is to be a very large affair, as the boat comfortably holds 3500 persons. There will be a number of forms of amusement including dancing and music, and the distribution of attendance prizes of considerable value. E. S. Marvin of the Imperial Oil Co. is in charge of the ticket sales for the association.

EX-SERVICE MEN MAKE UP PERSONNEL OF TIRE CO.

Two Salesmen Were Members of the Thirty-fifth Division.

Three ex-service men constitute the personnel of the Victor-St. Louis Tire Co. in the University Club Building, Grand and Washington avenues, which recently opened for business.

L. H. Vining, manager of the Victor-St. Louis branch, has had 12 years of experience in the auto tire business. During the war after several months of service in the infantry he became manager of the community center at Camp Sherman, O., where he remained until after the armistice.

H. W. Boone was a Sergeant-Major in the 110th Ammunition Train of the Thirty-fifth Division and R. W. Barton was a member of the 128th Field Artillery Regiment. Both are salesmen. Boone said his relationship is that of great-great-grandson to Daniel Boone, the explorer.

Vining said the policy of the Victor-St. Louis Tire Co. would be to sell tires and tubes to the consumer at dealers' prices. He said while the firm would do a jobbing business in Victor tires, the jobbing would be done direct with the users instead of the dealers.

The St. Louis Auto Supply Co., 3204 South Grand avenue, who have handled the Victor tire line for some time, will continue to sell them on the same basis, Vining said.

SOME HELPFUL HINTS ON MOTOR ACCESSORIES

Tire Chains for Slippery Pavements Often Overlooked by New Driver.

While it is usual for the American manufacturer to equip his car with everything that is needed to make the car run, there are certain very important accessories which most of our cars do not possess when they arrive in the owners' hands. Some new car drivers wait until the time comes to use such an accessory before they think about the real need for it, but the wise buyer will at once equip with the essential things.

First among these come tire chains for driving in rainy weather and on slippery streets. Some cars are already equipped with these, but they are few. Before the car is driven away from the dealer's showrooms there should be a set of skid chains in the tool compartment. Next to chains comes the jack. It is quite possible that the jack supplied is one that will work more than once, but usually the very cheapest sort of jack is supplied. If the one supplied is not of the best sort it will actually pay to get rid of it and buy the best jack made. While it is not fair to anticipate tire trouble with a new car, there is such a thing as a tack or nail and they make no distinction between new and used tires. A rim-operating tool is the next essential, and with it comes a vulcanizer. In other words tire equipment, even though new, should be considered as a potential trouble maker. The rim tool makes it easy to attach and detach the rim from the tire, the vulcanizer makes a tube patch a matter of a few minutes. A tire repair outfit will naturally suggest itself with the vulcanizer, and, above all, a tire gauge.

The dealer inflates the tires enough to run the car, and few of them pay much attention to the right pressure It is up to the owner to get the right pressure into the casings, even though the run to the home garage is only a matter of a few miles.

The average motorist locks the door after the horse is stolen; he thinks about car insurance after he gets the car. It would be interesting to find out how many brand-new cars are removed from garages. The wise buyer will have complete insurance written before he gets his car from the dealer. The latter, in most cases, is in a position to take care of the whole matter, charging no more than standard rates. If the dealer will not attend to it, it should nevertheless be done before the car is delivered, so that an accident or fire on the way home will not mean a loss to the owner.

With practically all state laws requiring some form of head lamp glare remover many factories are fitting special glass fronts as standard equipment, but still a greater number of cars come through without such equipment. I have known owners to be stopped by traffic officers before an opportunity was afforded to purchase nonglare fronts. In cases where the factory does not supply such devices the dealer will be glad to fit new lenses of any make.

In these days car thefts are numerous and while theft insurance protects the owner, there is no assurance that a new car will be forthcoming within a reasonable time. The automobile factories are so busy supplying the tremendous demand that it is very difficult to get delivery of a car before two weeks, in many cases two months and in others not for four months. A good car lock, while it may cost $10 or $15, is worth the price. Car thieves have a particular liking for new cars, but a suitable lock such as a transmission lock or a steering wheel lock, will do much toward keeping the thief away.

A storage battery hydrometer is a most important piece of equipment which may have immediate use. It should be used the day the car is received and in warm weather should be used to test the storage battery cells every week. Many storage batteries have literally been "shot to pieces" in the first month of use because of lack of attention to water filling and testing.

Tool equipment in the average car is sorely lacking in quality. The cheapest kind of wrenches and pliers are supplied. I know a great number of owners who use the equipment set merely for spares around the garage, purchasing a good, usable set for the car.

Among others a spotlight is a useful addition to the car's equipment, though not as essential as some of the others previously mentioned. In the same class with the spotlight comes body polish and car-cleaning paraphernalia, especially a compound which will remove road tar. Nothing is more disheartening than to bespatter a new body with road tar, which, by the way, must be removed within a few hours or it will leave indelible marks.

NEW TRUCK BODY HAS 8 TYPES IN 1

A collapsible body that is capable of being set up in eight different stylels known as the "8-in-1" convertible motor truck body, manufactured by the American Wagon Co., Dixon, Ill., made its first appearance in St. Louis this week. It was demonstrated Thursday afternoon on Motor Row. The body was mounted on a Chevrolet one-ton truck chassis.

The styles included in the eight varieties permit the hauling of livestock, produce, hay or grain by converting the body to suit the purpose.

MILWAUKEE MUNITION PLANT TO MAKE BICYCLE ATTACHMENT

MILWAUKEE, June 28.—The Briggs & Stratton Co., who during the war operated a mammoth plant for the production of hand grenades, have purchased the Smith Motor Wheel, a power plant attachment for bicycles, from the A. C. Smith Corporation of the same city.

Production has already begun and several extensive additions are being made to the plant in anticipation of the renewed interest in the once popular sport of bicycling.

Light Weight or Merely a Small Car?

Light Weight is not a matter of pounds—it is the relation of pounds to the size of the car.

The Holmes Improved Air-Cooled Car weighs 2925 pounds; it is mounted on 126' wheelbase—the weight is only slightly more than that of small five-passenger cars. You want a roomy car.

Tire sizes are 34'x4½' front and rear—less load on the tires in proportion to carrying capacity than with any other car of equal wheelbase. You want tire economy.

The motor dimensions are 3¾'x4¼' and this motor gives a flexible speed range of from 3 to 50 miles an hour on high gear. You want gasoline economy with power.

The springs are full elliptic, front and rear, perfect shock absorbing construction. You want easy riding.

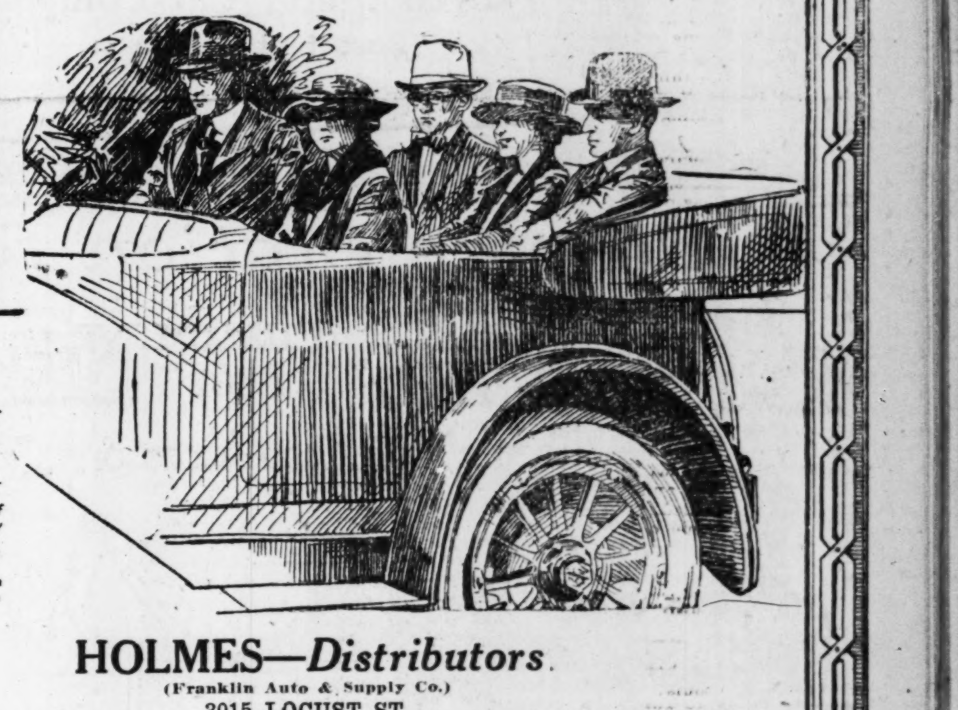
Holmes Light Weight is REAL—not merely fewer pounds bought at the price of restricted seating capacity The reasons are:—

The Holmes Improved Air-Cooled Motor, Aeroplane type, Dual Exhaust, with 18 Valves in the head, eliminating nearly 200 water-cooling parts.
An all aluminum body.
Scientific light weight in a flexible chassis.

These bring to a large, roomy, seven-passenger touring car the economy never before obtained other than in a small car of limited body size.

Gasoline consumption 18-20 miles to the gallon.
Tire mileage 10,000 miles to the set.

The Holmes Improved Air-Cooled Car is built for the man who appreciates the value of a properly sized car and yet who knows that present large car operating costs are excessive.



The rear compartment in the Holmes Touring Car seats five people in perfect comfort with plenty of room to enjoy the longest tours without fatigue. Two people in the front seat.

$9850 in cash buys this splendid 520-acre farm 4½ miles from the thriving town of Eldon in central Missouri.

Goodyear Cords Score 10,000 Miles—Still Going Strong

"On account of the excellent performance of our 1-1/2 ton truck equipped with Goodyear Pneumatic Truck Tires, I am taking this opportunity of expressing our entire satisfaction.

"We secure an average of forty miles a day out of this truck and since we have used the big tires, we have had practically no motor trouble whatever, which, naturally, should be credited to the resilience of the cord tires.

"These tires at present show very little sign of wear, notwithstanding the fact that they have covered approximately 10,000 miles."

Hanley & Kinsella Coffee & Spice Co.

UNQUESTIONABLY the most conclusive proof of the special advantages of Goodyear Pneumatic Cord Truck Tires is found in the signed statements of reputable concerns.

Here in St. Louis the Hanley & Kinsella Coffee & Spice Company, after changing over from solid tires, have found that they secure marked and definite advantages in using the big Goodyear Cords.

Mr. Kinsella, Jr., President, states that they "secure an average of 40 miles per day" from this Pneumatic-equipped truck, which is due to the ability of the easy rolling Goodyears to weave in and out of congested traffic.

Then he further states that he secures important savings in truck repair costs, which have been practically eliminated because of the remarkable cushioning power in these tires.

These two advantages—produced by Goodyear Pneumatics—evidenced in both an increased truck ability and decreased trucking cost—are even more attractive when it is noted that the tires have covered more than 10,000 miles and still show very little signs of wear.

Thus in the service of the Hanley & Kinsella Company these Goodyears have produced money savings that again stamps them profitable tires.

To help you obtain these same advantages, we will gladly analyze your hauling conditions so that we can determine accurately whether Goodyear Solids, Cushions or Pneumatic Cords will serve you best.

Phone or go to the nearest Goodyear Truck Tire Service Station, begin now to utilize the value in Goodyear Truck Tires and Service that Hanley & Kinsella found profitable.

Goodyear Cords Score 10,000 Miles—Still Going Strong

> "On account of the excellent performance of our 1-1/2 ton truck equipped with Goodyear Pneumatic Truck Tires, I am taking this opportunity of expressing our entire satisfaction.
> "We secure an average of forty miles a day out of this truck and since we have used the big tires, we have had practically no motor trouble whatever, which, naturally, should be credited to the resilience of the cord tires.
> "These tires at present show very little sign of wear, notwithstanding the fact that they have covered approximately 10,000 miles."
> Hanley & Kinsella Coffee & Spice Co.

UNQUESTIONABLY the most conclusive proof of the special advantages of Goodyear Pneumatic Cord Truck Tires is found in the signed statements of reputable concerns.

Here in St. Louis the Hanley & Kinsella Coffee & Spice Company, after changing over from solid tires, have found that they secure marked and definite advantages in using the big Goodyear Cords.

Mr. Kinsella, Jr., President, states that they "secure an average of 40 miles per day" from this Pneumatic-equipped truck, which is due to the ability of the easy rolling Goodyears to weave in and out of congested traffic.

Then he further states that he secures important savings in truck repair costs, which have been practically eliminated because of the remarkable cushioning power in these tires.

These two advantages—produced by Goodyear Pneumatics—evidenced in both an increased truck ability and decreased trucking cost—are even more attractive when it is noted that the tires have covered more than 10,000 miles and still show very little signs of wear.

Thus in the service of the Hanley & Kinsella Company these Goodyears have produced money savings that again stamps them profitable tires.

To help you obtain these same advantages, we will gladly analyze your hauling conditions so that we can determine accurately whether Goodyear Solids, Cushions or Pneumatic Cords will serve vou best.

Phone or go to the nearest Goodyear Truck Tire Service Station, begin now to utilize the value in Goodyear Truck Tires and Service that Hanley & Kinsella found profitable.

Stretched, as in the tire, good tubes do not rip when cut. They cut but do not rip. Make your dealer prove that the tube he sells will stand the Norwalk test.

The slightest cut in an inferior tube —Rip! and the tube is ruined.

The Scissors Test

Take sample piece of tube one-fourth inch by three inches. Stretch to nine inches or three times its original length. Cut on the edge with the scissors. The cut should not be more than one-eighth inch across the sample. If the strip tears apart the rubber is inferior.

Nothing, Something, Everything

1. The scissors test costs nothing. It shows that Norwalk Tubes, red and gray, do not rip. It shows that the cut from puncture or blow-out can always be repaired.

2. You buy a Norwalk floating stock* Tube. That's something. You learn to know it as the highest quality tube made.

3. And then you look for everything, for a complete proposition. You ask whether there is a casing as good. There is—a Norwalk cord or non-skid fabric with handsome black tread and snow white sidewalls.

350,000 TRUCKS IS 1919 SCHEDULE

1919 Passenger Car Production Will Be Less Than That of 1917, It Is Reported.

While statistics show that there were nearly 700,000 fewer passenger cars produced in the United States in 1918 than in 1917, it is also shown that the production of commercial cars and motor trucks in 1917 nearly doubled that of the previous year, according to the Overlander, a publication of the St. Louis branch of the Overland Automobile Co. The scheduled production of trucks and other commercial vehicles in 1919 is 350,000, while it is not believed the number of passenger cars to be built this year will equal the output in 1917.

The following figures are interesting in showing the war's effect on the manufacture of automobiles, the third largest manufacturing industry in the United States:

THE MAN WHO THOUGHT HE HAD KICK TO REGISTER

Motorist Had Failed to Give Speedometer Attention for Four Months.

"A somewhat indignant motorist drove into our service station a short time ago and complained that his speedometer had stopped recording," said D. F. Hyland, manager of the St. Louis branch of a large speedometer concern, in speaking of his experience with motorists who complain of speedometer troubles.

"Yes, sir, he was all worked up over it and I, too, was somewhat surprised until I began to question him.

" 'How long have you had your car?' I asked him. 'A little over a year, I guess,' he replied.

" 'Ever had any trouble before with your speedometer?' I queried. 'Oh, no, not a bit until this morning," he said without a moment's hesitation.

" 'How far have you driven your car?' was my next question. 'Nearly 10,000 miles,' was his rather proud reply.

" 'Have you kept the swivel joint and flexible shaft well lubricated at all times?' I ventured.

" 'I put some grease in the cup on the swivel joint about four or five months ago, I believe, but I have never touched the flexible shaft.'

"The mystery was solved, I thought. I detached the shaft and found that a link was broken. I showed the chain to the man. It had been running inside the casing perfectly dry, without a speck of grease, for several thousand miles, undoubtedly.

"Then it was my turn to deserve to feel a little indignant at least.

" 'During the past year have you ever put any oil in your car?' I asked him, politely. 'Oh, of course I have. I never permit my car to run without sufficient oil.'

" 'Listen, my friend. Why not give the speedometer the same attention, the same chance to make good? Do you not realize it is a finely constructed piece of mechanism that revolves at an average speed of 600 revolutions a minute as long as you drive your car?'

" 'There will never be any strain upon the flexible shaft chain if you will only keep it lubricated. Why, do you know that the twisting of a cotton string will operate a shaft chain when properly lubricated? There can be no strain, therefore, on the shaft chain if it is lubricated. And yet, to be sure beyond even unreasonable doubt that the chain will not break, each link is individually subjected to a one-half horsepower twisting test and then put through the same test again after the chain is assembled.

" 'You can readily see that there is hardly the remotest possibility of any flexible shaft giving trouble if the motorist will simply give it the same attention he gives the other parts of his car.' "

Evening Course in Architecture.

A new evening course, of four years and for a certificate, in architecture, is announced by Washington University for the ensuing school year, through Prof. F. W. Shipley, director of extension courses. It is designed largely for persons already engaged in architecture, but is open to anyone interested. The course includes elementary, intermediate and advanced design, shades and shadows, perspective, architectural and freehand drawing, history of architecture and architectural construction, with full drafting room work.

NOVEL SIGN USED TO BOOST TIRE SALES

The attention of many motorists has been attracted the last several days by an artistic brick column more than 10 feet high and three feet square which has been erected on the sidewalk at the northeast corner of Grand avenue and Pine street near the curbing. John Glenn, president of the Glenn Tire Co., said the column will be used as the base of a sign to advertise automobile tires.

The arrangement which he said was from a suggestion made by Harold Maxwell, advertising and sales manager of the Cupples Co., is to have an automobile tire mounted on a standard sized passenger car wheel and inflated. The wheel is to be mounted on a L-shaped axle with the long leg fixed in the brick base. By means of a roller attached to an electric motor the wheel will be kept in motion. A flashlight, Glenn said, will be placed in the building in such a position that it will play on the revolving wheel and be directed toward the sky. The spokes revolving will cause the glow from the high candle powered searchlight to flicker in the heavens. Glenn said the searchlight will be so arranged as to not interfere with the vision of passing traffic.

He said he expected to have the sign completed within a week and in operation.

STEPHENS Salient Six

New-Smart-Fashionable
"80 Series" Now on Display

"That is salient which is strikingly manifest or which catches the attention at once."—Webster.

Here is the new Stephens Salient Six—a smarter looking quality car—just arrived.

Refreshingly new all around, continuing the custom built quality bodies, beautifully rounded and tapering. Longer, lower, larger, roomier—displaying majestic road poise, wheelbase now 122 inches. Body sides are lower—seats lower, deeper and softer.

Vogish, wider, square finished doors equipped with neat, nickeled exterior door handles—the latest of fashion's decree.

A magnificent, fine looking hood, high, narrow and tapering—beautified by 28 fine, hair line, vertical louvres—and terminating at the perky tilted windshield.

Deep, lounge like, soft, genuine leather, Turkish upholstery—French pleated—doubly padded with real curled hair and mounted upon Marshall cushion springs.

Walnut paneling and thick rug covered floor. Touring toilet kit concealed in right front door and tool kit in the left.

Tonneau lamp and hood lamp. Neat aero type side lights setting off the tilted windshield. And that's only the start.

Speed that "bends" the speedometer. Power that takes you over the hills on high with ease, that creeps in traffic and leaps to road-flight with admirable quickness.

Chassis construction balanced and scientific. It runs so true and travels so swift and smooth, each ride you take you'll come to call a road-flight.

And these are only the beginning of all that is to be revealed by inspection and demonstration.

There is the Stephens Perfected Overhead-Valve engine with its vaporizing wall and superheating chamber.

The most powerful automobile engine for its size the world has ever known.

First to burn all the gas and first to burn the lowest grades of gas without lessened performance.

Noted for its habitual economy, that awakens a surging satisfaction when evidenced by low fuel bills and upkeep.

The public is invited to come and see the new Stephens Salient Six now on display.

Inspection and demonstration await you.

AUTO COVERS MORE THAN 150,000 MILES AND STILL RUNNING WELL

Alfred G. Ross, president of the Franklin-Ross Motor Car Co., has a 1909 model Franklin car on display in his showroom which he said has covered more than 150,000 miles and is still "going strong." The car is the property of R. B. Dreyer and is being used by Ross to demonstrate the stableness of Franklin design. Features still in use in the latest models that are shown on the 1909 model include automatic spark control which requires no spark lever, the spark being regulated according to the engine's speed by a centrifugal governor, wood frame, air-cooled motor, full elliptic springs, tubular front axle, drive through springs and aluminum body. Ross said he anticipates having a 1906 model Franklin on display soon that is still giving good service, being used by a local real estate dealer.

EXPRESSES FURNITURE TO ROLLA BY MOTOR TRUCK

St. Louis Concern to Haul Household Goods 155 Miles.

Among the inquiries received during the past week by Roy S. Rauschkolb, manager of the St. Louis "ship by truck" bureau, 3201 Locust street was one from J. A. Russell of 578 De Baliviere avenue, who was seeking information on the possibilities of shipping a three-room set of household goods from St. Louis to Rolla, Mo., by motor truck. Rauschkolb got in touch with Arthur Morgan of 2931 Easton avenue, who operates 11 trucks ranging from one to five ton capacity. Morgan said he has agreed to transport the household goods during the coming week. The distance by road to Rolla is about 155 miles.

Morgan this week delivered a truck load of household goods to West Frankfort, Ill., a distance of 125 miles, for Thomas Regbim, a miner, who formerly lived at [illegible] Clifton place.

Morgan said the truck rates on long-distance hauls were approximately the same as railroad rates. He said there has been a noted increase in the past few months in requests for long hauls of household goods as it does not require crating and reduces the handling to loading at the point of origin and unloading at the destination. He said to ship by railroad would require six to eight handlings. He said another feature in favor of the motor truck for the overland haul was that disputes could be settled with persons responsible on the ground whereas claims had to be filed necessitating long delays in some cases with the railroads.

Rauschkolb said a new motor truck express line is soon to be established operating between St. Louis, Union and Washington, Mo. George W. Cochnower of 4145 Maryland avenue will manage the new express line he said doing a general hauling business which he expects to start by July 1.

THREE NEW MODELS ARRIVE OF STEPHENS SALIENT SIX

Three types of the 1920 post-war models of the Stephens Salient Six motor car arrived this week in St. Louis, it was announced yesterday by M. H. Finck, manager of the Davie Motor Car Co., 1900 Washington avenue. The types include a roadster in olive drab, a four-passenger touring car in Saginaw red and a six-passenger car of similar design in deep Stephens blue.

Some of the new features of the 1920 model include roomier interiors, longer bodies on lower lines, doors wider and finished in squared design equipped with exterior door handles. The windshield is set at a snappy tilt and has improved top glass vision. The hood is high, narrow and tapering into the body. A novel feature is a toilet set including whisk broom, clothes brush, soap box, mirror and drinking cup in the pocket of the right front door. A complete rack of tools is carried in the pocket of the left door.

The salesrooms will be open until 10 p. m. each night during the week for the purpose of exhibiting the new models, Finch said.

ST. LOUIS TRUCK MEN GUESTS AT LUNCHEON

A special meeting of the Commercial Car Bureau of the St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers and Dealers' Association was held Friday at noon at the plant of the Traffic Motor Truck Corporation, 5200 North Second street. A luncheon was served to the truck dealers by the officers of the Traffic Truck Corporation in its dining room, after which they were taken for an inspection of the big new St. Louis motor truck building plant. A business meeting followed at which a full report was made by Chairman L. H. Amrine and Trip Commander Robert E. Lee of the finances and results of the recent motor truck expedition into North Missouri and Eastern Illinois.

KANSAS WOMEN FINANCE GIRLS FOR COLLEGES

Club Federation Supplies Funds for Those Wishing to Study for Professional Careers.

MONEY IS PAID BACK ON INSTALLMENT PLAN

188 Have Been Helped So Far and of These 105 Have Repaid Their Benefactors in Full.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

TOPEKA, Kan.—The Kansas Federation of Women's Clubs is sending 50 girls through college every year so that the girls will be fitted for careers of their own. The women's organization lends to the girls the money needed for their college courses or professional courses and the girls pay back to the clubs the money as they earn it after completing the school work.

There is now $11,659.32 in the fund to help girls go to college in Kansas. It may be only a business college or it may be a college course or a normal school, medical or dental college or any other professional school. It doesn't make any difference to the women what sort of work the girl wants to undertake, if she is poor and shows a disposition to work and study, she can have all the money needed to take her through the school.

This money was contributed in small amounts by the women of the State through the local clubs. The largest single gift so far made was one of $200. The fund was only started a few years ago and has been growing each year by the subscriptions of the members of the different clubs.

Help 188 Girls.

In the short time the fund has been in operation the women have helped 188 girls in their school work. Of this, 105 have paid back to the fund all the money they used and most of them paid interest and there are now 83 who are using the federation's money. By the time school opens next fall a considerable number of these will have paid back part or all of the money they borrowed, so that the women will have ample funds to help an entirely new batch of girls start into special school work.

While the federation is a strong believer in a college education for women and urges women to go to colleges, it prefers to make its loans to girls who are mapping their school work for a professional career. It does not look with favor upon a girl who borrows money for a college course, just to be able to say that she has had a college education. A girl who wants to teach, be a chemist, physician, lawyer, dentist or even just to be a stenographer is looked upon with great favor by the women and has no trouble arranging for the loans from the scholarship fund.

Girls Pay Back Money.

Thus far not a single girl has failed to make complete payment of her loan, with interest. Every loan was made to a girl who could not go to school without the advancement of funds. It is not expected that the money will be paid back in a lump sum. In fact, the women prefer that it be paid back in installments, as that provides some income to the fund all the time and allows the clubs to handle requests for funds at any time.

Mrs. C. F. Henson of Paola is the chairman of the Scholarship Loan Fund of the Kansas Federation of Women's Clubs. She has been in active charge of the fund for some time and has a complete organization throughout the district, so that whenever a girl applies the committee can make its investigations promptly and furnish the money without delay.

TO BUILD MEMORIAL HOTEL

Chicago Women Plan to Set Aside Rooms for Ex-Soldiers.

CHICAGO.—A plan to build a $2,000,000 hotel here as a memorial to the Chicagoans who fought in the war was announced by the Chicago Chapter of the War Workers of 1917, an organization of women who had sons in the service.

The project is to construct a 21-story hotel on Michigan avenue, with the first 18 floors devoted to the public and the three top floors set aside for the convenience of any former service men who may be in the city. Other novel features, such as memorial rooms named after dead heroes and battlefields, are proposed.

It is planned to accumulate a fund by popular subscription among the women of Chicago with which to erect the building.

Judge Refuses Charter.

PITTSBURG, Pa.—Plans for a nation-wide anti-tobacco campaign, intended to follow the actual promulgation of prohibition, were given a setback here when Judge James McF. Carpenter handed down an opinion in Common Pleas Court refusing to grant a charter to the No-Tobacco Corporation. The petition was signed by prominent church people and ministers of this and other cities of the country.

HYMNS ARE CRITICISED

LONDON.—Hymns used by Nonconformist churches in this country were vigorously criticised at a recent meeting here of the Congregational Union by Sir John McClure, an authority on music. Few of the tunes of the "Sankey type introduced from America," he asserted, even reached the standard of "respectable mediocrity," and many of them were "hopelessly vulgar."

He described as "pitiable doggerel" the hymn called "Fight the Good Fight With All Thy Might."

A plea was made by Sir John for "services of beauty." Remarking that the sermon had become "the golden calf of the denomination," he said their assembles for worship were too often looked upon as mere public meetings and their churches as the lecture rooms of popular speakers.

Britain to Repatriate Aliens.

LONDON.—In consequence of riots at Liverpool, Cardiff and elsewhere, in which colored men have participated, the British Government has decided to repatriate at the earliest possible moment all aliens who came to England during the war, according to the Daily Mail. The bulk of these are Chinese, the others including Swedes, Danes and Norwegians.

Employment Class to Dine.

The Employment Management class of Washington University will have a dinner and organization meeting at the American Annex tomorrow evening at 6:30 o'clock.

PRESIDENT REBER AGREES TO MEET KINLOCH STRIKERS

Accepts Proposal of Union Leader and Indicates He Will Not Object to Jennings Being Present.

SUGGESTS TOMORROW OR TUESDAY AS TIME

Conference of Committee Representing Bell Workers Who Are Out With Manager Hale Is Futile.

Striking operators and electricians of the Kinloch Telephone Co. were notified yesterday by President Reber of the company that he would confer with them in his office at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon or at 11 a. m. Tuesday. Reber sent the notification to O. E. Jennings, representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who had requested such a conference. He said he was willing that Jennings should accompany the employes' committee.

A committee of striking operators and electricians of the Bell Telephone Co., accompanied by two conciliators of the Federal Labor Department, by the Rev. Father Timothy Dempsey, and by Jennings, conferred yesterday morning with Manager Hale of the Bell company. Jennings said after the conference that nothing transpired to give hope of an early settlement, and that apparently the strike would have to be fought out.

Yesterday, the third day of the strike, service on the Kinloch system was meager, though some calls were handled. The Bell service, which had been nearly normal since the strike began Thursday noon, did not make so good a showing yesterday morning, but in the afternoon, when the large business houses had closed, calls on the Bell were handled with a fair degree of promptness. The Bell officials said the demands on their service had been increased by the suspension, in large part, of business on the Kinloch lines.

Reber's Letter to Jennings.

Reber's letter to Jennings, fixing a time for a conference, was sent to Jennings' downtown office while Jennings was attending a strikers' meeting at Hibernian Hall, 3619 Finney avenue, yesterday afternoon. It is as follows:

Your letter of the 27th inst., desiring conference with us for the purpose "of taking up questions which the present strike occurred over," received.

Your previous letters make it plain that the only reason a strike was called was our refusal to deal with you as a member of a committe, though we made no objection to the other members. This point was later, by authority from Washington, waived by us and you were notified before the strike was called.

Knowing well that we had binding agreements with certain of our employes, members of three locals of your organization, you and your associates persuaded them to break their agreements and leave their positions.

In view of the above situation, we see no reason, until the employes return to their work, why a conference on any questions would accomplish anything, as no agreement we might be induced to make could have any binding effect except upon us, and we see no reason to make any agreements which are one-sided in their result, nor do we know of any grievance or other questions that can be discussed at such a meeting which were at issue between us and our employes when the strike was called.

The strike was called without a grievance, and we have no disposition to discuss grievances subsequently manufactured.

However, in consideration of the public, which we serve 365 days of the year, and are endeavoring to continue so to do, we are willing to meet a committee of our former employes, and someone else not in our employe, if they so desire, and whom they may select to represent them, for the purpose of receiving any matters they desire us to consider.

If it is convenient for such committee, I will meet them at my

CROWDS FOUGHT FOR CHANCE TO GET NEAR BIG THREE

People Struggle to Touch Hands of Wilson, Clemenceau and Lloyd George.

By the Associated Press.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—The most dramatic moment connected with the signing of world peace came unexpectedly and spontaneously at the conclusion of this greatest ceremony in history, when Premier Clemenceau, President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George descended from the Hall of Mirrors to the terrace at the rear of the palace, where thousands of spectators were massed.

With the appearance of the three who have dominated the councils of the allies, there began a most remarkable and unprecedented demonstration. With cries of "Vive Clemenceau!" "Vive Wilson!" "Vive Lloyd George!" dense crowds sweet forward from all parts of the spacious terrace. In an instant the three were surrounded by struggling, cheering masses of people, fighting among themselves for a chance to get near the statesmen.

It had been planned that all the allied delegates would walk across the terrace after signing, to see the great fountains play, but none of the other plenipotentiaries got farther than the door.

President Wilson, M. Clemenceau and Lloyd George were caught in the living stream which flowed across the great space, and became part of the crowd themselves. Soldiers and bodyguards struggled vainly to clear the way. The people jostled and struggled for a chance to touch the hands of the leaders of the allies, all, the while cheering madly.

Probably the least concerned for their personal safety were the three themselves. They went forward smilingly, as the crowd willed, bowing in response to the ovation, and here and there reaching out to shake an insistent hand as they passed.

Virtually Carried By Crowd.

President Wilson, M. Clemenceau, and Mr. Lloyd George were virtually being carried in the arms of the people, and at one time it seemed as though they might be literally swept from their feet to the shoulders of their admirers. The demonstration continued clear across the terrace to the steps which the plenipotentiaries descended towards the lake. Part of the way down they stopped on the embankment to rest while the crowds eddied about them excitedly.

Throughout the great gardens the famous fountains were flinging their waters upward against a background of solid green furnished by the full leaved trees. The crowd itself was a picture.

A battery of big guns thundering out the announcement that peace had been consummated. Overhead French airplanes circled and swooped, the sunlight glancing from their silver wings.

The return of President Wilson, M. Clemenceau and Mr. Lloyd George toward the palace was a repetition of their outward journey of triumph. As they reached the Chateau, they turned to the left instead of entering. The crowd followed cheering tumultuously. A closed car was waiting and the three entered this. They drove from the grounds amid a profusion of flowers thrust through the open window.

WASHINGTON TAKES WORD THAT TREATY IS SIGNED QUIETLY

Momentary Demonstration in Halls of Congress, but Crowd on Street Gives No Sign of Interest.

"GOOD NEWS," FORMER SPEAKER CLARK SAYS

Borah Charges America Deserted China and That Treaty Is World's Greatest "Moral Breakdown."

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Word of the consummation of peace was received by the national capital with scarcely a flutter of popular or official sentiment.

At the White House and the State Department the news aroused only a quiet feeling of satisfaction that the prearranged program for the signing at Versailles had gone through. In Congress there was but a momentary demonstration, and on the streets the Saturday crowds gave no show of interest.

The story of the historic ceremony, flashed over a direct wire to the State Department, was given to the press in brief bulletins, keeping close step with the developments in the Hall of Mirrors. The account was brief, and was made public without comment by department officials.

As soon as signing was concluded, President Wilson's message to the American people announcing the long-waited event, and appealing for acceptance of the treaty without change or reservation, was made public at the White House, together with some details of the President's home-coming.

Notification to Senate Soon.

It was by the reading of this message Congress was informed that the Versailles negotiations were at an end. It was expected tonight that an official notification would await the arrival of Mr. Wilson and would be delivered in person by him at a joint session of the Senate and House.

In the Senate chamber, to which the nation's interest in the outcome of the peace negotiations now is transferred, announcement of the signing was received in silence. Interrupting an appropriation bill debate, Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, senior Democrat of the Foreign Relations Committee, read the President's message to an attentive audience comprising less than half the Senate's membership. Without any comment, he then relinguished the floor and the appropriations debate proceeded.

The House, however, punctuated reading of the message with applause and there was a short outburst of cheering when the President's name was read at the end. There was no discussion of it, the only comment being an announcement by former Speaker Clark, when he sent it to the clerk's desk to be read, that he wanted to put into the record some "good news."

Republicans Are Silent.

Privately Senators and Representatives who have supposted the league of nations expressed high praise for the President's message while Chairman Lodge of the Foreign Relations Committee and other opponents of the league covenant had nothing to say. Senator Borah, Republican, of Idaho, issued a statement on the subject, however, in which he bitterly criticised the treaty provisions affecting Shantung.

While the White House was not fully advised tonight regarding the President's plans, it was the expectation of officials that he would reach this country about July 7 and come almost immediately to Washington. It was revealed that he expected to land at New York and it was thought entirely likely he would remain there a few hours to attend a meeting of welcome.

Mr. Wilson's appearance before Congress probably will follow quickly his arrival in Washington, though it may be delayed a few days because of the plan of Senate leaders to take a series of short recesses after July 1. The President's speaking tour for the league of nations is expected to begin almost as soon as he has laid the treaty before Congress.

Senator Hitchcock declared President Wilson's address to the American people upon the occasion of the signing of the peace treaty, "a great announcement, an eloquent appeal

WILSON SAYS HE HAS NO POWER TO LIFT BAN UNTIL END OF DEMOBILIZATION

"Million Men Yet in Service," Says His Statement; War Time Lid Goes on Tomorrow at Midnight.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—President Wilson has decided he cannot legally lift the wartime prohibition ban before the country goes dry at midnight Monday, but expects to do so as soon thereafter as his power has been made clear by the completion of demobilization.

In a cablegram made public tonight at the White House, the President staid he was convinced, after consultation with his legal advisers, that he had no authority to act at this time.

"When demobilization is terminated," he continued, "my power to act without congressional action will be exercised."

The message expressed no opinion as to the authority of the President when he raises the ban to make his action applicable only to beer and wine.

Secretary Tumulty gave out the following statement:

"The secretary to the President at the White House tonight made public the following cable from the President with reference to wartime prohibition:

"I am convinced that the Attorney-General is right in advising me that I have no legal power at this time in the matter of the ban on liquor. Under the act of November 1918, my power to take action is restricted. The act provides that after June 30, 1919, until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of demobilization, the date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President, it shall be unlawful, etc.

"This law does not specify that the ban shall be lifted with the signing of peace, but with the termination of the demobilization of the troops, and I can not say that that has been accomplished. My information from the War Department is that there are still a million men in the service under the emergency call. It is clear, therefore, that the failure of Congress to act upon the suggestion contained in my message of the 20th of May, 1919, asking for a repeal of the act of November 21, 1918, so far as it applies to wines and beer, makes it impossible to act in this matter at this time.

"When demobilization is terminated, my power to act without congressional action will be exercised.

"WOODROW WILSON"

Close Monday Midnight.

Refusal of President Wilson to act at this time means that the law will reach out quietly at midnight Monday and close the door of every liquor establishment on American soil.

Next in public interest to announcement of the President's attitude comes the question—how soon will the army be demobilized? There was strong belief in some quarters tonight that this date would not be long delayed, in view of the signing of the treaty, the action of Congress in reducing the size of the army and the effort of the Government to bring back all troops from abroad just as speedily as it is humanly possible to bring them.

The President's emphatic announcement as to what he would do when demobilization "is terminated" was exactly in line with the opinion of members of the House Judiciary Committee expressed heretofore—that it did not require congressional action to authorize him to declare war-time prohibition ended.

This may come, it was pointed out, much sooner than most people imagine and there were predictions tonight that saloons in cities where the sale of liquor now is permitted might be in operation by the end of the summer. They could not operate, however, beyond Jan. 16, 1920, for on that date the country will become dry by constitutional amendment.

With all doubt removed as to what the President would or would not do, anti-prohibitionists in the House prepared to make the best fight possible on the general prohibition enforcement bill which was reported out yesterday by the Judiciary Committee. It will not be taken up on the floor until after the short holiday recess, which means that the Government will depend upon present laws for enforcement of the war-time act. Warning already has been given that these provide ample penalties and ample means of prosecution.

COUNTRY LIKELY TO BECOME WET AGAIN IN 2 MONTHS

Time Depends Upon Date When Demobilization Will Be Complete.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—President Wilson's definite refusal to set aside war-time prohibition at this time, on the ground that under the law he has no authority to do so, does not mean that the country will be continuously dry after June 30.

It does mean that the country will go dry at midnight Monday and will stay dry till the end of demobilization. Then there will be a brief wet interval before Jan. 16, the date on which the constitutional amendment will become effective.

The length of this interval depends obviously on the speed with which the 1,000,000 soldiers remaining under arms are demobilized. Troops are now being mustered out of the service as fast as possible. During July and August, according to the best estimates available tonight, they will be returned to civilian life at the rate of 400,000 a month.

The end of August, therefore, should see the army reduced to virtually the regular army basis.

At about that time, it is expected, the country will automatically become wet again for a few months. All that is necessary is that the President issue a proclamation declaring demobilization ended. He need not mention prohibition at all, as the terms of the act limit its operation to the specific period of the war and demobilization, to a date to be fixed by the President.

"The President is the judge," said Representative Igoe of Missouri, tonight upon learning that wartime prohibition would not be prevented by Presidential action.

"The law states," he continued, "that prohibition shall cease with the end of demobilization. In the face of the President's opinion nothing can be done unless Congress can give him further authority in the matter. There will be efforts to amend the law when the Volstead bill comes before the House."

Four members of the House Judiciary Committee, which, by majority vote, has favorably reported the drastic Volstead prohibition enforcement bill, are now engaged in drawing up the minority views against the measure. The dissenting members are Representatives Igoe and Dyer of St. Louis, Gard of Ohio and Steel of Pennsylvania. They expect to submit one or more reports to the House early next week.

Chairman Volstead of the judiciary committee, announced today that the majority report recommending passage of the enforcement measure would be presented to the House Monday.

In a memorandum prepared today for a minority report Representative Dyer contends that attempts to enforce the act will meet with failure in the courts, and that Congress has not the power to declare that every beverage containing one-half of one per cent of alcohol is intoxicating.

Premier Lloyd George, the newspaper adds, will address the British House of Commons, July 1, on the peace negotiations.

'GERMAN HONOR CARRIED TO GRAVE IN HALL OF MIRRORS'

Pan-German Paper's View of Signing of Treaty; Treaty "Scrap of Paper" Says Tageblatt.

By the Associated Press.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Pan-German Deutche Zeitung prints the following across its front page: "German honor today will be carried to its grave in the Hall of Mirrors, in which, in the glorious year of '71 the German Empire was resurrected in all its former splendor. Lest we forget, in restless labor the German people will again strive to attain that place among the nations of the world to which it is entitled. Then vengeance for the disgrace of 1919."

The Tageblatt says: "The German people reject the treaty which its delegates are signing today, and it does not believe for a single moment that it will endure. Despite the fact that it is written on parchment, it remains a scrap of paper, because it is a mockery of all the laws of reason and morals and the most disgraceful exhibit in the museum of civilization."

WAITED 49 YEARS FOR GERMANS' HUMILIATION, CLEMENCEAU SAYS

Announcement of Decision to Sign Was Big Moment of His Life, Premier States.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch.

PARIS, June 28.—When Premier Clemenceau heard that batteries of 75's were going to fire at intervals on Monday afternoon to celebrate Germany's declaration of her readiness to sign the treaty, he dropped everything and went to an advantageous spot to listen with his face almost abeam, to the thunder of the guns. Returning later to President Wilson's house, Clemenceau was questioned regarding his truancy. He said:

"I went to hear the guns fire the signal of peace and to announce France's victory. It was the moment for which I had waited 49 long and bitter years. It was the great moment of my life."

BLOCKADE WITHDRAWAL WAITS ON GERMANY'S RATIFICATION

Allied Note to German Delegates Delivered; Mueller and Dr. Bell Start Home.

By the Associated Press.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—The allied note to the German delegation dealing with ratification of the treaty by Germany, was delivered late this afternoon. It is pointed out in the note, among other things, that withdrawal of the blockade of Germany depends on ratification of the treaty.

Dr. Hermann Mueller and Dr. Bell and about 50 members of the German mission left Versailles at 8:20 o'clock this evening, going to the Noisy-le-Roi station, there to board a train on their return trip to Germany. Forty German secretaries will remain in Versailles to conclude the affairs of the German delegation.

Versailles Photographs.

A COLLECTION of photographs of scenes at Versailles, where the peace treaty was signed yesterday, together with an interesting snapshot of President Wilson and Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George together and a famous triumphant portrait of Bismarck at the other Versailles peace conference 48 years ago, will be found on page 1 of the General News Section of this issue of the Post-Dispatch.

CHINESE REFUSE TO TAKE PART IN THE CEREMONY

Gen. Smuts Signs After Criticism of Harsh Terms—Great Crowds Rush Around The Big Three as They Leave Hall of Mirrors.

By the Associated Press.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—World peace was signed and sealed in the historic Hall of Mirrors at Versailles this afternoon, but under circumstances which somewhat dimmed the expectations of those who had worked and fought during long years of war and months of negotiations for its achievement.

The absence of the Chinese delegates, who at the last moment were unable to reconcile themselves to the Shantung settlement and left the eastern empire outside the formal purviews of peace, struck the first discordant note in the assembly. A written protest which Gen. Jan Christian Smuts lodged with his signature was another disappointment to the makers of the treaty.

But, bulking larger, was the attitude of Germany and the German plenipotentiaries, which left them, as evident from the official program of the day and to the expression of M. Clemenceau, still outside any formal reconciliation and made actual restoration to regular relations and intercourse with the Allied nations dependent, not upon the signature of the "preliminaries of peace" today, but upon ratification by the National Assembly.

Germans in Bad Mood.

To M. Clemenceau's stern warning in his opening remarks that they would be expected, and held, to observe the treaty provisions legally and completely, the German delegates, through Dr. Haniel Von Haimhausen, replied, after returning to the hotel, that had they known they would be treated on a different status after signing than the Allied representatives, as shown by their separate exit before the general body of the conference they never would have signed.

Under the circumstances, the general tone of sentiment in the historic sitting was one rather of relief at the end of hostilities than of complete and unalloyed satisfaction.

The ceremony came to a dramatic close—in fact it reached its highest dramatic pitch—with the wild enthusiastic reception of President Wilson, M. Clemenceau and Lloyd George by the crowds outside the palace, who ignored or disregarded the minor discords of the day. They tore the three statesmen from their escorts and almost carried them bodily in their progress through the chateau grounds, to watch the playing of the fountains—a part of the program which had been planned as a dignified state processional of all the plenipotentiaries.

The ceremony otherwise had been planned deliberately to be austere, befitting the sorrows and sufferings of almost five years and the lack of impressiveness and picturesque color, of which many spectators complained, was a matter of design, not merely omission.

Ceremony Over in 49 Minutes.

The actual ceremony was far shorter than had been expected in view of the number of signatures which were to be appended to the treaty and the two accompanying conventions, ending a bare 49 minutes after the hour set for the opening. The proceedings were carried out without surface incidents, since the Germans were silent, and the Chinese refusal to sign was evident only by the vacant chairs.

The sole words to be recorded were M. Clemenceau's short opening allocution, with its brief stern warning to the Germans, and his equally terse phrases declaring the ceremony closed. The intervening three-quarters of an hour was marked by the scratching of big goose quills or modern steel pens, which most of the delegates preferred for signature, and the steady procession of delegation after delegation to the seats at the three tables within the enclosures upon which the documents were placed for signature.

Contrary to expectations, the Germans were called upon to sign first, and no precedence was given M. Clemenceau, President Wilson or Lloyd George, who, in the peace treaty, appear only as members of the respective delegations, and discard the dignities and responsibilities which during the negotiations were summed up in the phrase, "The Big Three."

Germans Show No Emotion.

The two German delegates arose without a word at M. Clemenceau's bidding and placed upon the treaty the sign manuals which German Government leaders declared until recently would never be appended to it. It was too distant to watch, even with glasses, the expression on the faces of the German plenipotentiaries during the ceremony, but more fortunate observers among the officials say that they fulfilled their roles without apparent indications of emotion such as marked Von Brockdorff-Rantzau's dramatic declarations at the first meeting.

WAR ENDED ON FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF ASSASSINATION WHICH LED TO IT

When they regained their seats after signing, President Wilson immediately arose, and followed by the other American plenipotentiaries, moved around the two sides of the great horseshoe to the signature tables, President Wilson and not M. Clemenceau thus had the honor of signing first of all the leaders of the world alliance, but the honor was due to the alphabet, not other considerations, as the signatures occur in same the French alphabetical order as the enumeration of the allied and associated Powers in the prologue of the treaty—the same order which determined the seating of the delegations at the plenary sessions of the inter-allied conference. The five great Powers thereunder are grouped separately, the smaller states following again in alphabetical order.

Cries of "Down in Front!"

But, if the formal proceedings moved with system and complete adherence to program, the same cannot be said for the other arrangements which detracted most markedly from the impressiveness of the epochal event. So many spectators had, in one manner or another, gained access to the hall that the struggle for points of vantage at times approached the stage of a brawl and the few officials entrusted with keeping order had the greatest difficulty in securing even a semblance of order.

Cries of "Down in Front," which probably never before were heard at a gathering of similar importance, were addressed quite as often to the officials of the conference as to the unofficial spectators. The stage for the ceremony was quite as crowded as the spectators' enclosures, giving a picture of crush and confusion, and the plenipotentiaries and attaches, instead of arriving in delegations, formally introduced by ushers, as had been planned, drifted in individually as at the earlier sessions.

Germany and the Allied and Associated Powers signed the peace terms here today in the same imperial hall where the Germans humbled the French so ignominiously 48 years ago. This formally ended the world war, which lasted just 37 days less than five years. Today, the day of peace, is the fifth anniversary of the murder of Archduke Francis Ferdinand at Serajevo.

Premier Clemenceau called the session to order in the Hall of Mirrors of the Chateau of Versailles at 3:10 o'clock. Herr Mueller signed at 3:12 o'clock and Herr Bell at 3:13 o'clock. President Wilson signed a minute later. At 3:45 o'clock the momentous session was concluded.

Little Gold Lace and Pageantry.

All diplomats and members of their parties wore conventional civilian clothes. There was a marked lack of gold lace and pageantry.

There were few of the fanciful uniforms of the Middle Ages whose traditions and practices are so sternly condemned in the great seal-covered document signed today.

A spot of color was made against this sombre background by the French guards. A few selected members of the guard were resplendent in their red plumed silver helmets and red, white and blue uniforms.

As a contrast with the Franco-German peace session of 1871, held in the same hall, there were present today grizzled French veterans of the Franco-Prussian war. They replaced the Prussian guardsmen of the previous ceremony, and the Frenchmen today watched the ceremony with grim satisfaction.

The conditions of 1871 were exactly reversed. Today the disciples of Bismarck sat in the seats of the lowly, while the white marble statue of Minerva, Goddess of War, looked on. Overhead, on the frescoed ceiling, were scenes from France's ancient wars.

Close Came Quietly.

The close of the ceremony came so quickly and quietly that it was scarcely noticed until it was all over. M. Clemenceau arose and in a voice almost lost amid the confusion and hum of conversation which had sprung up while the minor delegates were signing, declared the conference closed and asked the Allied and Associated delegates to remain in their places for a few minutes—this to permit the German plenipotentiaries to leave the hall and the building before the general exodus.

None arose as they filed out accompanied by their suite of secretaries and interpreters, just as all the plenipotentiaries had kept their seats when Dr. Mueller and Dr. Bell entered. This was regarded as an answer to the action of Count Von Brockdorff-Rantzau in reading his speech seated at the first meeting, but even more as an expression of sentiment at the German attitude toward the acceptance of peace.

The only uniforms seen in the long hall to match the rich coloring of the ceiling, the paintings and magnificent marbles which Louis IX built into his chateau were those of a group of allied generals, almost all wearing the flaming scarlet sash of the legion of honor, and the ceremonial scarlet and white garb of the famous French Republican guard, who were stationed about the hall.

Pershing and Foch Present.

Gen. Pershing and Marshal Foch were among the Generals present, but it safe to say the entrance of a selected group of 45 common soldiers of the Allied Armies attracted more attention and comment than did that of the commanders whose names will be handed down in the history of the war. These heroes of the war were clad in sober field uniforms of gray and horizon blue, matching well with the equally sober black of the plenipotentiaries and secretaries grouped around and within the great horseshoe table.

Prominent among the American guests were Mrs. Wilson, accompanied by Miss Wilson and Mrs. Lansing, Mrs. House, Mrs. Wallace, Mrs. Scott and several other wives of the delegaes and officials.

Others in the American section included President Wilson's wartime and conference advisers, Herbert Hoover, Bernard M. Baruch, Vance McCormick, John W. Davis, American Ambassador to Great Britain Hugh C. Wallace, American Ambassador to France and Harry Morgenthau and about 70 of the more important attaches of the peace commision. Four wartime French Premiers, M. M. Vivianian Briand, Ribot and Painleve, were among M. Clemenceau's guests in the French section. The British, Italian and the smaller nations sent representative delegations.

When the program for the ceremony was shown to the German delegation, Herr von Hainhausen of the German delegation went to Col. Henri, French liaison officer, and protested. He said:

"We cannot admit that the German delegates should enter the hall by a different door than the Entente delegates; nor that military honors should be withheld. Had we known there would be such arrangements before, the delegates would not have come."

After a conference with the French foreign ministry, it was decided as a compromise, to render military honors as the Germans left. Otherwise, the program was not changed.

Lansing First to Arrive.

Secretary Lansing was the first of the distinguished diplomats to arrive. He was followed shortly by M. Clemenceau and Gen. Bliss. Few of the spectators recognized any of the diplomats as they came in, and there were no demonstrations.

The delegates of the minor powers made their way with difficulty through the crowd to their place at the table. Officers and civilians lined the walls and filled the aisles. President Wilson's arrival 10 minutes before the hour for signing was greeted by a faint burst of applause from the few persons who were able to see him.

The German correspondents were ushered into the hall shortly before 3 o'clock and were given standing room in a window at the rear of the correspondents' section.

When Premier Lloyd George arrived, many of the delegates sought autographs from the members of the Council of Four and they busied themselves signing copies of the official program until the Germans entered the room.

At 3 o'clock, a hush fell over the hall and the crowds shouted for the officials who were standing to sit down so as not to block the view.

Germans Take Seats Quietly.

At 7 minutes past 3, Dr. Hermann Mueller, the German Secretary for Foreign Affairs, and Dr. Bell, the Colonial Secretary, were shown into the hall and quietly took their seats at the left end of the U-shaped table. They showed composure, and manifested none of the uneasiness which Count von Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German peace delegation, displayed when handed the treaty at Versailles.

M. Clemenceau, as president of the conference, made a brief speech, inviting the Germans to sign the treaty, and there was a tense pause. William Martin, Master of Ceremonies, after a moment's delay, escorted the German plenipotentiaries to the signatory table, where they signed the treaty, the protocol and the Polish undertaking. Because of the confusion and the crowd, the signing lost much of its expected dignity.

After the Germans had signed, President Wilson, followed by the other American delegates, made his way to the table and he and the others speedily affixed their signatures. Premier Lloyd George came next with the English delegation. The British dominions followed—Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and India, in the order named.

During the attaching of the signatures of the great Powers and the Germans, a battery of moving picture machines and cameras clicked away so audibly that they could be heard above the general disorder.

At 3:45 the booming of cannon in celebration of the peace broke the monotony in the Hall of Mirrors, where the crowd has tired of the almost endless signing.

Clemenceau's Speech.

Premier Clemenceau, in opening the session, said:

"The session is open. The allied and associated Powers on one side, and the German commission on the other side, have come to an agreement on the condition of peace. The text has been completed, drafted, and the president of the conference has stated in writing that the text that is about to be signed now is identical with the 200 copies that have been delivered to the German delegation. The signatures will be given now, and they amount to a solemn undertaking faithfully and loyally to execute the conditions embodied by this treaty of peace. I now invite the delegates of the German commission to sign the treaty."

Marshals and Generals of the allied armies took the first places on the benches provided for privileged guests invited to the ceremony, but the 15 privates from each of the principal armies stood within the inclosure reserved for the plenipotentiaries and high officials of the conference as a visible sign of their role in bringing into being a new Europe.

Crowd About Leaders.

As Premier Clemenceau, President Wilson and Premier Lloyd George emerged from the palace the great crowd gathered outside swept aside the cordon of troops, cheering madly.

The three statesmen were swept along by the surging thousands. Many soldiers broke ranks and joined in the demonstration, while guns boomed and low-flying airplanes seemed to fill the air.

Premiers Clemenceau and Lloyd George and President Wilson were photographed together on the terrace. After the demonstration the three allied leaders left Versailles in the same automobile, the crowds following and cheering.

Smuts' Objections.

Gen. Smuts said that the indemnities stipulated could not be accepted without grave injuries to the industrial revival of Europe. He declared it would be to the interests of the allied Powers to render the stipulations more tolerable and moderate.

In his protest Gen. Smuts declared that there were territorial settlements which he believed would need revision and that there were guarantees provided which he hoped would soon be found out of harmony with the new peaceful temper and unarmed state of the central powers. Punishments were also foreshadowed, he said, over which a calmer mood might prefer to pass the sponge of oblivion.

The following soldiers attached to President Wilson's residence witnessed the ceremony attending the signing of the peace treaty. George William Bender, Baltimore; Stanley Cohek, Chicopee, Miss; George Bidgewater, Palestine, Texas; Harlan Hayes, Green City, Wis; J. S. Horton, Lexington, Miss; William R. Knox, Temple, Ok; Albert E. Landreth, Portsmouth, Va.; Sergt. Sam Lane, Prosper, Texas; George Ludance, Philadelphia; M. D. Mary, Havre, Mont; Fred Quantz, Cleveland, O.; Hubert Ridgeway, Missouri; Raymond Riley, Baltimore and Frank Wilgus, Allentown, N. J.

Tre work of the peace conference will not be interrupted by the signing of the treaty with Germany, although President Wilson has left Paris and Premier Lloyd George will return to London on Sunday. Foreign Secretary Balfour and Secretary of State Lansing will replace the British Minister and President Wilson in the work yet to be done. The American delegation remains to go on with the work. The peace treaty with Austria probably will be taken up Monday.

Treaty Great Charter for New Order of Affairs, Says Wilson to America

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.

PRESIDENT WILSON in an address to the American people on the occasion of the signing of the peace treaty made a plea for the acceptance of the treaty and the covenant of the league of nations without change or reservation. His message, given out here by Secretary Tumulty, said:

"My fellow countrymen: The treaty of peace has been signed. If it is ratified and acted upon in full and sincere execution of its terms, it will furnish the charter for a new order of affairs in the world. It is a severe treaty in the duties and penalties it imposes upon Germany, but it is severe only because great wrongs done by Germany are to be righted and repaired; it imposes nothing that Germany cannot do; and she can regain her rightful standing in the world by the prompt and honorable fulfillment of its terms.

"Liberates Great Peoples."

"And it is much more than a treaty of peace with Germany. It liberates great peoples who have never before been able to find the way to liberty. It ends, once for all, an old and intolerable order under which small groups of selfish men could use the people of great empires to serve their own ambitions for power and dominion.

"It associates the free governments of the world in a permanent league in which they are pledged to use their united power to maintain peace by maintaining right and justice. It makes international law a reality, supported by imperative sanctions. It does away with the right of conquest and rejects the policy of annexation, but substitutes a new order, under which backward nations—populations which have not yet come to political consciousness, and peoples who are ready for independence, but not yet quite prepared to dispense with protection and guidance—shall no more be subjected to the domination and exploitation of a stronger nation, but shall be put under the friendly direction and afforded the helpful assistance of governments which undertake to be responsible to the opinion of mankind in the execution of their task by accepting the direction of the league of nations.

Recognizes Nationalities.

"It recognizes the inalienable rights of nationalities; the rights of minorities and the sanctity of religious beliefs and practice. It lays the basis for conventions which shall free the commercial intercourse of the world from unjust and vexatious restrictions, and for every sort of international cooperation that will serve to cleanse the life of the world and facilitate its common action with beneficent service of every kind.

"It furnishes guarantees such as were never given or even contemplated before for the fair treatment of all who labor at the daily tasks of the world. It is for this reason that I have spoken of it as a great charter for a new order of affairs. There is ground here for deep satisfaction, universal reassurance and confident hope."

LONDON CELEBRATES; KING SHARES JOY

George Issues Statement Upon Hearing Ceremony at Versailles Is Over.

By the Associated Press.

LONDON, June 28.—After news of the signing of peace had been received here today the following was issued over King George's signature:

"The signing of the treaty of peace will be received with deep thankfulness throughout the British Empire. This formal act brings to its concluding stages the terrible war which has devastated Europe and distracted the world. It manifests the victory of ideals of freedom and of liberty for which we have made untold sacrifices.

"I share my people's joy and thanksgiving and earnestly pray that coming years of peace may bring to them ever increasing happiness and prosperity.

(Signed) "GEORGE R. I."

London learned of the signing of the peace treaty at Versailles at 3:40 o'clock. The news became known through the firing of guns which had been installed during the war to warn the city of air raids.

Moving throngs came to a halt a few seconds. Then the people gave themselves up to a celebration.

Thousands of Boy Scouts, drawn by the blowing of many whistles, gathered to celebrate in Hyde Park. In fact, the whole West End suburban district participated in the celebration. The only quiet spot was the square mile which composes the city of London proper, and which is always deserted Saturday afternoons. Even there flags were soon flying.

Thousands of persons assembled before Buckingham palace. King George, Queen Mary and other members of the Royal family appeared on the balcony. The guards band played national airs and the crowd sang. The vast mass of people was constantly changing, newcomers replacing those who left. Members of the Royal family after leaving the balcony, reappeared frequently. Tonight a great circle of search lights is playing streams of light throughout the city.

SHIPS OF NAVY SALUTE SIGNING OF WORLD PEACE

Secretary of the Navy Daniels Orders Men-o'-War and Stations to Mark Event.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Secretary Daniels today sent this message to all naval ships and stations:

"The signing of the treaty of peace at Versailles ushers in the best day in the history of the world since the angels sang in Bethlehem 'Glory to God in the Highest, On Earth Peace, Good Will Toward Men.'

"We are living the fulfillment of that prophecy. As a republic we are grateful to have borne a part in making straight and plain the path of permanent peace with justice to the world. Upon the receipt of news of signing of the treaty of peace, the most important document in the history of the world, every ship and shore station will fire a salute of 21 guns with national ensign at each masthead.

TREATY WILL BE RATIFIED AS 'IT NOW STANDS'

Hitchcock Declares All Efforts of Senators to Modify the Document Will Be Beaten.

By a Staff Correspondent of the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska, leader of the administration forces in the Senate, told the Post-Dispatch correspondent today that reservations to the peace treaty which changed the meaning of the treaty in any respect would be tantamount to amendments and that all proposed reservations would be fought. He predicted that all efforts to modify the treaty would be beaten and that, in the final alignment on ratification, not more than 16 Senators—15 Republicans and 1 Democrat—would be found in opposition. The Democrat is Senator Reed of Missouri.

In the fight for reservations to the league of nations covenant Hitchcock said the Republicans will be hampered by disagreement among themselves as to what reservations should be pressed.

"Some," he said, "are opposed to Artle 10, but are not interested in the other questions raised. Some want a qualification respecting immigration and the tariff and see no harm in Article 10. Some are interested only in getting a reservation on the Monroe Doctrine. There is not sufficient strength for anyone of the proposed reservations or amendments to secure its adoption.

"Faced, on the final vote, with the necessity of saying yes or no to the treaty, most of those who are now calling for reservations will vote yes.

"The treaty will be ratified as it now stands."

In addition to the reservations already proposed, Senator Gore of Oklahoma is thinking of offering a resolution providing for submission of the treaty to a vote of the whole people. Administration leaders hope to dissuade him from this course.

Evidences continue to pile up that Republicans in the Senate are uniting to demand that the peace treaty be accepted only with reservations limiting America's participation in the league of nations.

The program laid down for the party by Chairman Will H. Hays of the Republican National Committee embodies two main features: First, that the treaty must be ratified and got out of the way as speedily as possible; second, that it shall not be ratified without reservations "safeguarding American independence and traditional rights."

Senator Spencer's statement to the Post-Dispatch that he favored reservations, and that he would not vote for the league covenant as it now stands, is in keeping with the general trend of Republican comment.

Senator Kellogg of Minnesota, whose position has been in doubt, is now known to be committed to the reservations plan.

Opposed to Amendments.

Senator Capper of Kansas said today that he found himself in close accord with Spencer's views on the league. Like Spencer, Capper is opposed to amending the peace treaty on the ground that such procedure would result in interminable delay. He expressed the view, however, that there is ample precedent, in the diplomatic negotiations of the last 100 years, for accepting the treaty with reservations. This is the view now being assiduously put forward by the Republicans. They maintain that the making of reservations would involve no delay in the establishment of formal peace, such as would occur if amendments were made in the treaty itself.

Capper is the Kansas vice president of the League to Enforce Peace.

Indicates Growing Opposition.

Spencer has been regarded all along as a friend of the league of nations idea. The fact that both have come out flat-footedly in favor of qualifying America's acceptance of the treaty, is indicative of growing Republican solidarity against the President's proposal that the league covenant be adopted as written.

Opponents of the President assert that with the exception of Senator McCumber of North Dakota, a thick and thin supporter of the league, they can muster the entire Republican strength in the Senate in favor of reservations.

The Republicans have a majority of two in the Senate. If Spencer, Capper, Kellogg and others who favor the league theory, but balk, for various reasons, at the text of the proposed covenant, stand by their guns, the Republicans will have an excellent chance of "putting over" their reservations plan.

and an inspiring prophecy for the future."

Some members of Congress and others who are watching the Irish question were particularly attracted to that portion of the President's address in which he referred to "Peoples who are ready for independence but not yet quite prepared to dispense with protection and guidance" and that the treaty "recognizes the inalienable rights of nationality."

No one here ventured to interpret what was in the President's mind when he wrote those passages, but they were scanned with much interest.

As to Publication.

So far as officials here know, the peace treaty will not be formally made public yet, even thought it has been signed, as the State Department has no instructions to publish it and does not intend to do so unless President Wilson directs.

The President's first act probably will be to send the document to the Senate, and it would be counter to custom if the Senate itself published the treaty before it acted upon it. The movement, however, to conduct the Senate debate on it in open instead of executive session, may bring about early publication.

It also is probable that some part of the treaty will go into effect before the Senate ratifies.

The commissions for administration of Danzig and the Saar Valley, it is thought here, will have to begin work at once to prevent a renewal of hostilities on account of the disturbed conditions in those regions.

The State Department has been consulting the American commissioners in Paris regarding the speedy re-establishment of American Consul service in the former central empires. It is felt that the restoration of the diplomatic establishments can wait for a time. But, as raising the blockade will open the doors to trade relations, and as, under American law, consular certification of invoices and papers relative to trade is essential, an effort is being made to find some way to re-establish these officials throughout Germany and Austria without awaiting the approval of the Senate to the peace treaty.

Borah Makes Statement.

Senator Borah, in a statement tonight, said President Wilson's statement on the signing of the peace treaty was the "most remarkable statement ever made by a President," or any other public man. Borah said:

"In view of the great wrong which we helped perpetuate upon China, the President's statement about respecting nationalities and justice to all peoples is the most remarkable statement ever made by a President or any public man to the American people. The Shantung affair is perhaps the most complete moral breakdown in the history of treaty making. China was our ally. She went into the war upon our advice and upon the assurance of our Government that she would be fully protected in her rights in the peace conference."

How Historic Hall Was Arranged for Ceremony

Scene Around Versailles Palace Animated From Early Hour Until After Signing of Treaty.

By the Associated Press.

VERSAILLES, June 28.—The peace treaty was deposited upon the table in the Hall of Mirrors at 2:10 by William Martin of the French Foreign Office. It was inclosed in a stamped leather case.

President Wilson entered the Hall of Mirrors at 2:50 o'clock.

The Germans entered the hall at exactly 3 o'clock (9 a. m., St. Louis time.)

The morning had been a cloudy one, but shortly before midday the clouds began to break.

Last-minute changes were made in the program to expedite the signing of the treaty. Two additional tables were placed beside the one within the historic Hall of Mirrors on which the peace treaty was laid. One of the new tables held the Rhine convention and the other the protocol containing changes in the interpretations of the treaty.

Thoroughfares Kept Clear.

Hours before the time set for the ceremony a seemingly endless stream of automobiles began moving up the cannon-lined hill of the Champs Elysees, past the Arc de Triomphe and out through the shady Bois de Boulogne, carrying the plenipotentiaries, officials and guests to the ceremony. The thoroughfare was kept clear by pickets, dragoons and mounted gendarmes.

The automobiles bearing delegates and secretaries had reserved for their use the Avenue du Paris, the broad boulevard leading direct to the Cheateaus Court of Honor, French soldiers being ranged along the highway on both sides.

At the end of the court a guard of honor was drawn up to present arms as the leading plenipotentiaries passed, this guard comprising a company of Republican guards in brilliant uniform. The entrance for the delegates was by the marble stairway to the "Queen's apartments" and the Hall of Peace, giving access thence to the Hall of Mirrors. The walls of these apartments were hung with unique Gobelin tapestries.

The route to the peace table for the plenipotentiaries was through a space reserved for some 400 privileged guests, who were instructed to be in their seats well in advance of the entry of the delegates.

How Hall Was Arranged.

Within the Hall of Mirrors where the historical furnishings and paintings gave a tone of impressive state, which would otherwise have been rather lacking in the assemblage of soberly attired delegates, 72 chairs of the plenipotentiaries were drawn up around three sides of the table, which formed an open rectangle fully 80 feet in length on its longer side. A chair for M. Clemenceau, president of the peace conference, was placed in the ce[illegible]f the long table facing the win[illegible] with those for President Wils[illegible] Premier Lloyd George on the right and left hand, respectively.

The peace table, a huge hollow rectangle wtih its open side facing the windows in the hall, was in place early, its tawny yellow coverings blending with the rich browns, blues and yellows of the antique hangings of the room and the rugs covering the dais. The mellow tints of the historical paintings on the arched roof of the long hall completed the picture and were much appreciated by those who visited the Hall of Mirrors.

The tables for the secretaries which threatened to interfere with the view of the invited guests and newspaper men were placed inside the table for the plenipotentiaries. The tables and chairs reserved for secretaries and other officials, about 100 in number, encroached considerably on the space reserved for the table upon which the treaty reposed while the signing was going on. This table is a leather-covered antique of the regency period with bronze ornamentatin.

Eleven Regiments There.

The scene around the Versailles palace was an animated one from an early hour. As the morning wore on the crowds kept increasing in size, but the vast spaces around the chateau swallowed them up at first. By noon 11 regiments of French cavalry and infantry under command of Gen. Brecard had taken positions along the approaches to the palace, while within the great court on either side solid lines of infantry in horizon blue were drawn up at attention.

Long before the ceremony began a line of gendarmes was thrown across the approaches. While theoretically only persons bearing passes could get through this line, the crowds gradually filtered into and finally filled the square. Within this square hundreds of fortunate persons had taken up positions at the windows of every wing of the palace.

The final allotment of seats in the ceremonial chamber meanwhile had been made. The places for the German delegates were reserved on the side of the horseshoe table, where they touched elbows with the Japanese plenipotentiaries on their right and the Brazilians on their left. The delegates from Ecuador, Peru and Liberia faced the Germans across the narrow table.

The original of the treaty is on Japan parchment. It cost 15,000 francs ($3000) to prepare the document.

President Poincare, who had failed to get a ticket of admission to the Hall of Mirrors, received several cards for the ceremony.

Quill Pens Provided for Treaty Signers Wishing to Use Them

By the Associated Press.

VERSAILLES, June 28.

A BOX of old-fashioned goose quills, sharpened by the expert pen pointer of the French Foreign Office, was placed on each of the three tables for use of those plenipotentiaries who desired to observe the traditional formalities.

CHINESE APPEAL TO JUDGMENT OF WORLD

Delegates to Peace Conference Issue Statement on Their Refusal to Sign Treaty.

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 28.—China's refusal to sign the peace treaty came after repeated efforts of the Chinese delegation to obtain permission to sign with reservations on the Shantung settlement.

President Wilson was appealed to by the Chinese delegation several times within the past week, and at first seemed inclined to favor allowing the Chinese to attach their signatures with reservations. Finally, however, he concurred in the decision of the conference that the Chinese might make a declaration on their position after signature, but not before.

This was regarded by the delegation as not protecting China's rights. The Chinese refused to sign and are now awaiting further orders from Pekin.

The Chinese delegation issued an official statement on its position tonight, reviewing its protest against the Shantung settlement, made to the council of Prime Ministers on May 4 and its reservation on the same question, made in the plenary session of the peace conference, May 6, against the transfer of German rights in Shantung to Japan instead of to China.

The statement says the action of the conference on Shantung evoked a nation-wide protest in China, which makes it impossible for the Chinese Government to accept the objectionable clause in the treaty.

The Chinese delegation's proposal was that it write in the treaty above its signature "subject to reservation made at the plenary session of May 6, relative to the question of Shantung in articles 156, 157 and 158."

The statement says the peace conference, through official channels, denied action on the part of China which would make it possible to reopen the Shantung question.

"After failing in all earnest attempts at conciliation," says the statement, "and after seeing every honorable compromise rejected, the Chinese delegation had no course open save to adhere to the path of duty to their country.

"Rather than accept by their signature the Shantung articles in the treaty, against which their sense of right and justice militated, they refrained from signing the treaty altogether. The Chinese plenipotentiaries regret having to take a course which appears to mar the solidarity of the Allied and Associated Powers. However, they are firmly of the opinion that responsibility for this rests not with themselves, who had no other honorable course, but rather with those who, it is felt, unjustly and unnecessarily deprived them of the right of making a declaration to safeguard against any interpretation which might preclude China from making reconsideration of the Shantung question at a suitable moment in the future, in the hope that the injustice to China might be rectified later in the interest of permanent peace in the Far East.

"The peace conference having denied China justice in the settlement of the Shantung question, and having today, in effect, prevented them from signing the treaty without sacrificing their sense of right, justice and patriotic duty, the Chinese delegates submit their case to the impartial judgment of the world."

4 IN JAIL TELL OF $41,000 ROBBERY; MONEY NOT FOUND

Payroll Bandits Believed to Have Buried Loot in Woods Where They Were Captured After Being Shot

ONE OF 6 WAS KILLED, OTHER GOT AWAY

Sheriff Feared to Take Prisoners Back to Benton, Ill., Where They Shot 3 Fuel Company Office Employes

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

MARION, Ill., June 28.—Four of the robbers who Friday entered the office of the Middle Fork Mine of the United States Fuel Co., two miles east of Benton, shooting three employes and taking $41,000 in payroll money, and who were shot and captured that night in the woods near West Frankfort where they were surrounded by a pursuing posse, today admitted their guilt in the Williamson County jail, according to the authorities. They gave their names to the authorities. They had previously given assumed names. They are: Roy Lubini, 34 years old, Anton Farnett, 31 years old; Angelo Trini, 23 years old, and Albert Trini, 25 years old. Angelo Trini and Albert Trini are cousins. All of the men were employed in various mines near Benton. It was Nello Pertgoto killed in the flight from the mine.

Authorities believe tonight the story first told by the robbers that there were six members of the gang. The men still cling steadfastly to their statement that the sixth man escaped with the money, and say he is Jim Farnett, brother of Anton, or "Tony," as he is known.

Money Not Found.

The money has not been found. It was in a bag about three feet long, in which it was originally transported from the First National Bank in Benton to the office of the Middle Fork Mine. A creek, near which the robbers abandoned the automobile owned by Angelo Trini and in which they fled after the robbery, will be dragged tomorrow in an effort to find the bag of money.

Angelo Trini said he met the other members of the gang early Friday morning after he had told his wife he was starting for St. Louis to sell his automobile. They drove all morning on the roads in the vicinity of the Middle Fork Mine. They cut telephone wires leading from the mine office and entered the place. They began shooting immediately and one of them swept the payroll money from a desk into the bag. As they ran to the car, about 150 yards away, Pertgoto, who was carrying the money, stumbled and fell. As he rose he was shot through the head by Night Watchman Devilbiss. The other robbers threw his body and the money bag into the car. When they discovered they were surrounded after the posse had followed them into the woods they left their confederate's body near the car which had been abandoned because of a broken wheel.

All of Robbers Wounded.

All of the robbers were wounded. Angelo and Albert Trini are perhaps in the most serious condition. Angelo has nearly 200 shot wounds in his body. One bullet wound in his chest may prove fatal. Albert was shot near the heart. It is thought he will recover.

Mob Violence Feared.

The robbers were not taken to Benton, which is 93 miles from St. Louis, because it was feared the citizens there might attempt mob violence. This is not anticipated at Marion. The town has been very quiet since the men were brought here. Sheriff Thaxton encountered a small mob near West Frankfort while he was on his way here and they threatened to lynch the prisoners, but trouble was avoided.

It was reported late today that the mine employes shot by the robbers will recover.

Boy, 14, Says He Was Whole "Crime Wave by Myself"

Exposes Secrets of the "Brotherly Bums" Who Lived in a Cave and Tells How He Stole Autos and Robbed Apartments.

Rupert Kinsloe, 14 years old, in knee pants and small for his age, sat in the office of Chief of Detectives Hannegan yesterday afternoon, and ofter exposing the secrets of the "Brotherly Bums," told of having stolen four automobiles in less than a week and committing other crimes, from burglary in an apartment to robbing the mails.

"I guess I was a whole crime wave by myself," laughed the boy as he finished his story.

The boy is the son of Mrs. E. W. Thomas, 535 Clara avenue. E. M. Thomas, his stepfather, he said, was connected with the Crane Insurance Co. His father died when he was less than a year old.

The boy was graduated last month from Junior High, where he had taken a manual training course, and was scheduled, he said, to enter Soldan High next fall.

Arrested in Stolen Auto.

He was arrested at noon yesterday by Detectives Reinwald and Shannon, automobile detectives, as he rounded into Twelfth street from Locust street in an automobile reported stolen Friday night from in front of the Washington Hotel. The detectives recognized the stolen license number and stopped the boy. The auto belonged to Harry R. Kurtz, 5140 Enright avenue. In the boy's pockets the detectives found two revolvers, a real one and a water gun. He readily admitted stealing the autoombile and later confessed a series of crimes dating back to the early part of last September.

He started out with the "Brotherly Bums," he explained, the "Bums" comprising a crowd of boys from school.

"We had a cave on Delmar boulevard, just east of Laurel, on the west side of the street, during the flu ban," the boy said, in telling of the secrets of the band. "We dug the cave ourselves and were having a fine time till it filled with water and we had to leave it. We started out stealing candy. We would go into a drug store in a bunch. One of the 'Bums' would talk to the clerk while the rest of us would sneak the candy. Then we'd take it to the cave and divvy up. We had a good time.

"When school started up again after the flu and the cave filled with water we busted up. They haven't been with me since." He gave the detectives the names of the other "Bums."

After leaving the "Bums," Rupert said, he started out on his own hook. His first effort, he said, was a burglary in an apartment at 730 Clara avenue. He rang the doorbell, he said, and when no one answered he climbed to the roof via the outside stairway and let himself down inside by means of a rope attached to a skylight.

"I only got 50 cents there, though," he said. "That's all that was in the purse."

Discouraged for a While.

The poor results discouraged him for a while, he said, and he tended strictly to his school. In the last month, he said, he started again, though, and was "doing fine."

Monday, June 23, he took the automobile of Dr. Chauncey Wright, 5455 Delmar boulevard, when he found it parked in the rear of that number. He said he "rode around" until the next day, when the gasoline gave out and he left the machine at Eiler street and Grand avenue.

Two days later, Wednesday, June 25, he stole the automobile of Mrs. Edward H. Simon, 4001 Washington avenue, from Grand and Delmar avenues, and when he "got tired" of it parked it in front of his home, where, he said, police found it and towed it away the next day.

Thursday, June 26, he appropriated the automobile of E. W. Glenny, 733 Bayard avenue, from King's Highway and Delmar avenue, and rode around until the "juice" gave out and he left it in Forest Park.

Friday night he took a large car belonging to Kurtz. He drove it to his home. He could not light the lights, he said, so he parked the car in the rear of his home until noon yesterday when he got in and started for a ride which terminated in his capture.

On one occasion last week, he said he "stalled" the engine of one of the automobiles when a traffic policeman gave him a signal at Sixth and Washington avenue. The policeman asked him his age, he said, and he "fooled the cop" by giving his age as 15. "He helped me start the car and I went on my way," the boy laughed.

The boy said he frequently robbed apartment letter boxes and had in his possession a letter he said he had stolen yesterday from the mail box at the apartment where his mother lives. It was addressed to Mrs. Mary Torbert, 535 Clara avenue, and had a return address on the back. The boy said he got $7 in currency out of the letter. He turned the money and letter over to the detectives.

He got a draft out of another letter and had endorsed it "Bobby Compton" on the back. He had not cashed it, though, when arrested and gave it to the police.

A check for $22.50 belonging to his mother, which he said he stole, was also in his pockets. He had endorsed it, too.

The water gun and revolver in his pockets, he said, he obtained in a hardware store at 4312 Olive street, a short time before his arrest. He said he wanted to buy the pistol to celebrate the Fourth of July. The hardware man refused $5.50 for the weapon, he said, because of his youth, so he gave the man 25 cents for the water gun.

"While he was in the telephone booth I took the pistol I wanted," the boy said "and walked out."

Boy's Mother Faints.

When the detectives took the boy to his home and told his mother of his confession the mother fainted. Trading stamp books he had in his pockets, she said, had been taken that morning from the home. The boy said he was going to "cash them" and spend the money.

"He's always had all the spending money he wanted. I don't see why he should steal," the mother told the detectives.

The boy said he learned to drive an automobile because his family always owned one. He always refused to ride with them, though, he said, because they wouldn't let him drive. "I wanted to drive myself. That's why I stole the cars," he said.

He was turned over to his mother, who promised to produce him in Juvenile Court when he is summoned. A duplicate report of his admission of having stolen from letter boxes will be forwarded to the Postoffice Department.

DANCERS MISS CAR, STROLL IN ON AND SPOIL BANK ROBBERY

Two Men "Killing Time" Till Next Interurban Have Exciting Half Hour at Nilwood, Ill.

If Harold Smith and Glenn Martin of Girard had not gone to Nilwood, Ill., to a dance and if they had not missed the last interurban car, the Bank of Nilwood would have been robbed. Incidentally the young men would have missed the most exciting half hour of their lives.

Smith and Martin attended the dance, escorting two young women of Nilwood. When the dance was over they found that the last car had left and that they would have to wait for the McKinley line sleeper.

Strolling into the business district they noticed two men sitting on the steps of the bank and started to cross the street for a chat. The strangers, who wore masks, opened fire with revolvers.

Smith and Martin fled down the street and came upon an automobile. The driver started the engine, evidently intending to pick them up. As the Girard boys neared the machine, however, the occupants discovered they were not of their party and fired a salvo of revolver shots.

Smith and Martin promptly deserted the business district and headed across country to Girard. The bank was not robbed.

ALL VOLUNTEERS HOME SOON

Every War Emergency Soldier Expected to Embark by Sept. 1.

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—By Sept. 1, if plans of the War Department are carried out, every man who enlisted or was drafted for the war emergency will have been returned to this country from Europe. Gen. Peyton C. March, Chief of Staff, made this statement today to Representative Igoe of St. Louis, who had asked that a cablegram be sent to Gen. Pershing urging the release of one of Igoe's constituents.

Igoe was told that in view of the special effort being made by the department to return the emergency trops, no request for the prior release of an individual could be considered, except on evidence of probably fatal illness in his immediate family.

DE VALERA CHEERED IN BOSTON

"President of Irish Republic" Greeted by Large Crowds.

By the Associated Press.

BOSTON, June 28.—Eamenn de Valera, "President of the Irish Republic," was given a tumultuous greeting when he stepped off his train at the South Station tonight on his arrival from New York. De Valera was taken to the Copley Plaza Hotel, the crowd closing in behind and on both sides and accompanying the automobile for the entire distance. A band headed the procession.

De Valera will address a mass meeting at Fenway Park tomorrow afternoon. On Monday he will speak before the State House of Representatives.

'WAKES' BEGUN AS FINAL TRIBUTE TO 'JOHN BARLEYCORN'

Demonstrations Till Midnight Tomorrow—Losers in Prohibition Fight, Not Winners, Celebrating.

DEALER TELLS WHO 'KILLED COCK ROBIN'

Package Sales Overshadow Bar Trade in Many Saloons —Numerous Suitcases Are Filled for Suburbanites.

The wake and burial of John Barleycorn, at the Riverview Club, north of the Chain of Rocks, last night, was the most ceremonious, thus far, of the celebrations of the passing of the legalized sale of liquor, which began yesterday and will continue until midnight tomorrow.

The celebrating is being done by those who consider themselves the losers in the prohibition fight, not by the dry advocates who were the winners. Saloon keepers and their regular customers, and the appreciative frequenters of clubhouse bars, appeared in many cases to be making merry. But at the Riverview Club the attitude of solemnity was preserved by the interment of an effigy, in a real coffin and a real grave. A demijohn, a red wig and a suit of clothes were the chief ingredients of the effigy.

The funereal spirit was present, after the news was received that President Wilson had announced that he would not interfere with wartime prohibition at present. At the time when this news came, a committee of physicians was considering the question whether John Barleycorn could be resuscitated; but after the tidings from the President, they were convinced that he had breathed his last. However, hope was expressed that his apparent demise might prove to be only a case of suspended animation.

Nameplate on Coffin.

The coffin bore a nameplate and had foot rails for sustaining mourners. There were wreaths of flowers, as well as a wreath of pretzels and a pair of skates. The active pallbearers were Ed Kuhs, J. T. Vierheller, Dr. E. M. Carson, J. T. Fitzgerald, C. E. Smith and Jean Knott. Robert E. Lee pronounced the eulogy, telling of the popularity of the deceased, and as the interment took place, at midnight, a quartet sang "How Dry I Am," and "Pickle My Bones in Alcohol." Herman Spoehrer, chairman of the club's entertainment committee, was in charge. Several city officials were among the 300 or more members and guests who viewed the ceremony.

A special jollification at the Elks' Club tomorrow night will mark the passing of alcohol. The bartenders have been coached so that they will maintain the proper lugubrious air. A wake and mock burial will be features of the program. Crepe will be much in evidence, those who are familiar with the arrangements say.

A special dinner dance will take place tomorrow night at Sunset Hill Country Club, reservations having been made for 200. A "four-day wake" began at the University Club Friday night when college men crowded the grill room for a singsong to commemorate the passing of "hard likker." The annual stag at the Liederkranz Club was held last night.

Retail liquor sales yesterday and last night were very heavy. Market street saloons and other places in the Union Station neighborhood found bar trade overshadowed by their package business and many bottles disappeared inside the suit cases of outgoing suburban residents or persons from places outside the suburban zone.

The Anti-Saloon League is not celebrating. This is partly because its jubilations took place when the prohibition amendment to the Constitution was ratified by the needed 36 states. It is partly due, moreover, to the realization that there may be some heavy going ahead in enforcing the prohibition law, especially in the six and one-half months of "wartime prohibition," between now and Jan. 16 next.

The Association Opposed to National Prohibition, with headquarters at Chicago, has sent an appeal to all parts of the country asking its members and "friends of constitutional liberty" to identify themselves next Monday by wearing a daisy in the coat lapel.

To Sell Milder Drinks.

East St. Louis saloon keepers have, in several cases, decided to try the soft drink business. Harry Carpenter, Frank Waller, E. L. Thesieres and Eddie Carr are some of the downtown saloon men who plan to continue to assuage thirst by milder means than heretofore. Frank Geary said yesterday that he would build a hotel on the site of his saloon opposite the city hall. Geary ventured an explanation of who "killed cock robin."

"I am disgusted with the saloon business anyhow," said Geary. "With the breweries and whisky makers cutting each other's throats for business, the saloon man was made the goat. He got it in the neck from all sides, was taxed and regulated to death and forced to meet the competition of crooks and grafters, forcing the decent saloon keepers to adopt their methods or quit business. The result was that the decent people decided to put the whole thing out of business."

PRESIDENT REBER AGREES TO MEET KINLOCH STRIKERS

office Monday at 3 p. m., or Tuesday at 11 a. m.

We note that you regret the public has suffered inconvenience on account of subnormal service, which condition you are responsible for, and which you can remedy by persuading your followers to apply for reinstatement to their former positions.

Report on Bell Conference.

Jennings, in reporting to the Hibernian Hall meeting on the result of the conference with the Bell officials, and in speaking of the communication from Reber, did not encourage the strikers to think that a settlement was near. He said Hale had asked him to modify his demands for wage increases and the closed shop, and he asked the strikers whether they would have wished him to modify the demands. Shouts of "No!" came in reply.

Jennings said that Miss May Matthews of Boston, organizer of New England women telephone strikers, would be here by tomorrow evening. He spoke of reports that negro chauffeurs employed to take girls to work at the Bell exchanges, had acted insolently toward girls doing picket duty.

The next meeting of the strikers will be held at Hibernian Hall tomorrow afternoon, no meeting being scheduled for today.

The delegation which called at Hale's office included four women. The first question which arose was as to the right of Jennings to represent the operators. Hale said some of the signatures to the letter of employes, asking for the conference, appeared to have been written by others than the purported signers.

Besides Hale, F. M. Stephens and L. H. Curtis, assistant plant superintendents, were present for the company.

Statement by Hale as to Meeting.

Hale last evening gave out the following statement:

"In a meeting today with a committee representing striking employes of the Bell Telephone Co., there were submitted certain demands by the striking employes. There were demands made for the reinstatement of certain employes. This was answered by the statement that the Postoffice Department had investigated the cases, and any further action regarding them must be at the instance of the Postoffice Department.

"There was a further demand for a contract and recognition of the union. The committee was advised that this could not be considered.

"Further demands as to working conditions and wages were made. In regard to wages, the demands were entirely unreasonable and beyond the resources of the company. It was explained to the committee that the public would first have to pay rates that would yield sufficient revenue to pay such wages, and it was suggested that if the committee wished to submit something in a modified form it would be considered. The committee was further advised that any readjustment of wages, materially increasing the operating expenses of this company would, during the time that these properties are under Government control, require the approval of the Postoffice Department, and after that, consideration by the Public Utilities Commission of Missouri, which regulatory body must determine the reasonableness of rates necessary to meet the increased expenses.

"The committee of striking employes was also advised that they represented only a very small percentage of the Bell Telephone forces, and that a much greater percentage of employes now on duty, througn committees which had been elected by them, were considering questions of working conditions and wages, and that the company would be obliged to hear and consider their report before reaching any conclusion."

The Bell Telephone Co. has lately, with the sanction of the State Public Service Commission, increased its residence telephone rates, the increase amounting to 25 per cent in the case of party lines.

No Effort Made to Fill Places of Strikers in East St. Louis.

No effort is being made by the managers of the telephone exchanges in East St. Louis to fill the places of the strikers, and as a consequence the service is demoralized. Only one operator was on duty in the Kinloch office yesterday, and she was able to take care of but a small percentage of the calls. The Bell service was more satisfactory, but connections were made only after patient waiting. The strikers have made no demonstration, contenting themselves with picketing the entrances to the buildings.

FREE IRELAND AMENDMENT TO TREATY IS PROPOSED

Washington Dispatch Says, However, That President Will Soon Make Statement as to Ireland.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—An amendment to the peace treaty, providing for the recognition of Ireland as a free and sovereign nation, constitutes the most embarrassing proposition that has risen in connection with ratification by the Senate.

The statement is made that a direct amendment to the peace treaty will be offered when the proper time arrives. This will be in the briefest possible form, merely declaring that the portion of the British Empire known as the Island of Ireland is given recognition as a free and independent nation.

Soon after it became known that an amendment on behalf of Ireland was contemplated it was stated by Senators friendly to the administration that President Wilson was prepared to take care of Ireland and a formal announcement would soon be made. It is said the British authorities will give Ireland a colonial form of government, the same as that now enjoyed by South Africa.

SOLDIERS TOUR CITY AS BOAT CLUB GUESTS

Outing for Barracks Convalescents Takes Place of Annual Automobile Run.

Abandoning its annual automobile run in favor of a service to convalescent soldiers at the Jefferson Barracks Hospital, the Century Boat Club yesterday afternoon gave about 125 of the soldiers and some 25 of their nurses a three hours' ride about the city. The tour was made in 40 autos belonging to club members, driven chiefly by the owners or members of their families, which left the Barracks at 3:30 p. m.

The route led through the Compton Heights district, over Longfellow and Hawthorne boulevards, through the downtown streets, through Forest Park, past Washington University, Barnes Hospital, and, by way of Tower Grove and Carondelet Parks, back to the Barracks and the evening "chow."

Feminine Company Provided.

Many of the members brought their wives or daughters in order to provide feminine company for the nurses. The doughboys assumed that the feminine company was intended for them and one gleefully remarked when he perceived a good-looking young woman in the tonneau of one of the cars, already flanked by two tickled veterans, "Gee, that's the car I wanted to get in all the time."

There was great rivalry as the men flocked down upon the machines, first to see who could be seated beside a girl, and when these were all monopolized, to see who could get seats in the "twin sixes," leaving the girl-less and humbler cars to the less fleet. This proved to be rather a hardship on the few who were using crutches.

Louis Schmitt marshaled the drivers, in each of whom was apparent a different temperament cheifly shown by his ideas of speed and portion of the street to use. Director of Public Welfare Schmoll was chairman of the committee of arrangement. The cars were all decorated with American flags and the green and white pennant of the club, and ranged in style from the 12-cylinder to a little henryford artfully camouflaged with daubs of bright paint.

For a time, along the Lemay Ferry road and through Carondelet, a hearse driver clung to the middle of the parade, one chauffeur in which held him to be the cause of the hard luck that he subsequently suffered.

John E. Dougherty, a contractor, had the best decorated car and the worst luck. It was he who followed the hearse, a none too pleasing position for his daughter, Miss Margaret, and the Chicago and Arkansas soldeirs who were in his car. His machine was changed entirely as to outline by the skillful application of cheese cloth covered over by paper serpentine. On the sides and back, in the club colors, were the letters, "C. B. C.," and a novel top consisted of a large American flag.

Run of Bad Luck.

First, Dougherty's motor began to "miss," and shortly after he had succeeded in shaking the hearse from his view, he had a blowout, which was not repaired until the parade was well on its way back.

The soldiers in Dougherty's car spent their time while the tire was being repaired in concocting a yarn to tell their comrades about where they had been. In substance it was that the car, with all its decorations, was too pretentious to go with the rest, and that its occupants slipped off and enjoyed a special feast at a South Side inn.

The doughboys, all of whom are in good physical condition and close to the end of their hospital stay, were profuse in their thanks when they returned to the Barracks.

After the soldier-passengers were unloaded the club members returned to the club for a dinner-dance.

President's Tribute to France on Eve of Departure Home

By the Associated Press.

PARIS, June 28.

PRESIDENT WILSON today on the eve of his departure from France, made the following statement:

"As I look back over the eventful months I have spent in France, my memory is not of conferences and hard work alone, but also of innumerable acts of generosity and friendship which have made me feel how genuine the sentiments of France are towards the people of America and how fortunate I have been to be the representative of our people in the midst of a nation which knows how to show us kindness with so much charm and so much open manifestation of what is in its heart.

"Deeply happy as I am at the prospects of joining my own countrymen again, I leave France with genuine regret, my deep sympathy for her people and belief in her future confirmed; my thought enlarged by the privilege of association with her public men, conscious of more than one affectionate friendship formed and profoundly grateful for unstinted hospitality and for countless kindnesses which have made me feel welcome and at home.

"I take the liberty of bidding France Godspeed as well as goodby, and of expressing once more my abiding interest and entire confidence in her future.

"WOODROW WILSON."

KENTUCKY WHISKY STOCKS VALUED AT $320,000,000

40,000,000 Gallons in Saloons and Warehouses — Larger Cities Do Rushing "Last Days'" Business.

Special to the Post-Dispatch.

LEXINGTON, Ky., June 28.—With 40,000,000 gallons of whisky valued at $320,000,000 in saloon stocks and bonded warehouses, Kentucky cities which are still "wet" observed their last Saturday night before prohibition goes into effect. In Louisville, Lexington and Covington it is estimated that a quarter of a million dollars worth of liquor was sold today to people desiring to stock up.

Automobiles, drays and other vehicles went in every direction with liquid freight. Hundreds of suitcases were piled up for those who desired to take a supply. One woman here bought a large stock, buried it in her back yard and planted flowers over it.

SUNSET HILL WOMEN BATHERS MUST WEAR LONG STOCKINGS

Steward Says Future Violators of Rule Will Be Excluded From Country Club Pool.

An order posted yesterday by the board of directors of the Sunset Hill Country Club demands strict enforcement of the rule requiring that women bathers wear full length stockings.

Oscar E. Broyer, steward of the club, says that recently bathers have demonstrated a tendency to disregard the law of stockings. The penalty exacted for violations in the future, he said, will be exclusion from the pool.

Workers who desire to help in Spring Clean-Up are offering their services through Post-Dispatch Wants.

SAYS WOMEN CAN VOTE WITHOUT ENABLING LAW

Election Board Chairman Takes Issue With Attorney-General on Meaning of Amendment.

Glendy B. Arnold, chairman of the Board of Election Commissioners, yesterday gave it as his opinion that no enabling legislation is necessary in Missouri to give women the full opportunity and privilege of exercising the elective franchise upon an equality with men, provided the proposed woman's suffrage amendment becomes a part of the Constitution of the United States. His opinion was prompted by the publication in Friday's issue of the Post-Dispatch of an interview from Attorney-General McAllister, who expressed doubt of the women's right to vote without special legislation.

He said: "As I recall it, that amendment provides that 'the rights of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any state, on account of sex.'

"Adoption Will Nullify State Law."

"Our State Constitution and statutes, by the use of the word 'male' in defining the qualifications of voters, exclude women from the exercise of the elective franchise. If the women's suffrage amendment is ratified by three-fourths of the states it becomes a part of the Constitution of the United States, and hence 'the supreme law of the land.' It will be a self-enforcing provision when adopted. The direct effect of its adoption will be to nullify or repeal the word 'male' contained in the provisions of our State Constitution and statutes, defining the qualifications of voters. After the adoption of the amendment it will become obligatory upon the courts and election officers of this State to construe our laws defining the qualifications of voters as though the word 'male' had never been written into them. This conclusion is sustained by several decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Prior to the adoption of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments to the Constitution of the United States, many of the State Constitutions used the word 'white' in defining the qualifications of voters. The adoption of these amendments was held to 'repeal' the word 'white' contained in those constitutions and to bring negro male citizens within the meaning of their provisions. The adoption of these amendments placed the negro on an equality with the white man, so far as the franchise was concerned, without any enabling legislation enacted by the states.

Supreme Court Decision.

"In passing on this question the Supreme Court of the United States, in Neal vs. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, uses the following language:

> The presumption should be indulged, in the first instance, that the State recognizes, as its plain duty, an amendment of the Federal Constitution, from the time of its adoption, as binding on all of its citizens and every department of its government, and to be enforced, within its limits, without reference to any inconsistent provisions in its own Constitution or statutes.

"The Court quotes approvingly the language of several of the State Judges of Delaware, who had previously passed on that case, which is quite to the point. I quote here excerpts from the opinions of two of the State Judges which were approved by the United States Supreme Court:

"Chief Justice Comegys said:

> The Fourteenth Amendment, therefore, and the Act of 1875, passed by Congress as appropriate legislation for its enforcement, or either, are superior to our State Constitution, and it had to give way to them, and it did give way, and was repealed, so far as the word "white" is mentioned therein as a qualification for a voter at a general election, as soon as the amendment was proclaimed to be adopted, and has been so understood and treated by all persons in this State from that time forth.

"Another learned Judge of the State Court used this language:

> There is not a lawyer of any political party that has ever doubted, since the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, that the word "white," in our Constitution, was entirely stricken out.

"The following quotation will be found in Ex Paret Yarbbrough, 110 U. S. 651, decided by the Supreme Court of the United States:

> In all cases where the former slave-holding states had not removed from their Constitutions the words "white man" as a qualification for voting, this provision (the Fifteenth Amendment) did, in effect, confer on him the right to vote, because, being paramount to the State law, and a part of the State law, it annulled the discriminating word "white," and thus left him in the enjoyment of the same right as white persons.

"Under these authorities the adoption of the suffrage amendment as a part of the Constitution of the United States will give to the women of Missouri all of the voting privileges of the men."

WOMEN GIVEN INSIGHT INTO PARTY POLITICS

Democratic and Republican Representatives Enlighten Prospective Voters of Twelfth Ward.

Women of the Twelfth Ward were enlightened regarding politics at a tea given by the St. Louis Equal Suffrage League at the Century Boat Club yesterday afternoon. Oliver T. Remmers, an attorney, former State Representative, representing the Republican party, and Verne C. Lacey, assistant Circuit Attorney, representing the Democratic party, explained to the women the advantages of partisan politics.

Remmers urged the women either to organize their own parties or affiliate with any of the already established parties as a safeguard against the spread of Bolshevism. Bolshevism, he said, takes root only where the political organization is imperfect. Lacy, too, advised bipartisan organization. He traced the history of the Democratic party and told of the help the Democrats have given to the cause of women's suffrage. The ratification of the suffrage amendment at the special session of the Legislature next week will be due, for the most part, to the efforts of his party, he said.

Mrs. Frederick Blaine Clark, executive secretary of the Equal Suffrage League, explained the plans of the organization to educate women for voting. Political schools in which political science and the theory and practice of voting will be taught are to be established in various parts of the State. The length of the courses and the time of attendance have yet to be decided upon, she said, but it has been definitely planned to establish them as soon as possible after the State's ratification of the amendment.

The national suffrage organization, which won the ballot for women, is to be supplanted soon by the National League of Women Voters, to see that women will handle their vote in the proper way, she said.

The hostesses were: Mrs. Harry A. Frank, chairman of the Arrangements Committee, assisted by Mrs. Alois Herman and Misses Clara and Ella Hoffmeister. Miss Margaret Foristel was chairman of the Hostess Committee, the other members of which were Mrs. Verne Lacy, Mrs. Edmond Koeln, Mrs. William Landwehr, Mrs. M. Daly, Mrs. W. O. Hill, Mrs. Walter Hunt, Mrs. C. A. Mackey, Mrs. Gustavus Tuckerman, Mrs. Charles Neuman, Miss Alice Goltermann, Miss Kate Ferry, Miss Kate Brown and Mrs. T. B. Brown.

The tea, which was the first large suffrage meeting in Carondelet, was attended by about 200 women. Mrs. Virgiania Harriss, chairman of the Twelfth Ward Branch of the Equal Suffrage League, presided.

"If I Only Could Play the Piano"

You Can

WE don't mean simply put a roll on the player-piano and then pump. There's not a lot of satisfaction in that kind of music.

What we mean is this:

To play the piano with personal control of the keyboard—to be master of theme and tempo—to accentuate, to subdue—to throw yourself into the spirit of the music—and to play.

To do this even though your fingers don't know a single note on the keyboard.

Indeed it must take a wonderful instrument to make this possible The Pianola is a wonderful instrument. It is a player-piano that gives you fingers of air over which you have complete mastery.

IF you love music you are never going to be content until you are the possessor of a Pianola. The genuine Pianola is made in five famous pianos—the Steinway, the Weber, the Steck, the Wheelock, the Stroud. Pianola prices are reasonable and the payment terms convenient. An interesting booklet, "The Story of the Pianola," on request.

$5,000,000 IN WILL TO PROMOTE MUSIC

Juilliard's Gift Will Aid Metropolitan Company, Which He Supported.

By Leased Wire from the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 28—Augustus D. Juilliard, multimillionaire capitalist, who once confessed that he possessed "something like a romantic interest in the Metropolitan Opera House and all things musical," provided in his will filed at Goshen, N. Y., Thursday, an endowment approximating $5,000,000 to aid the Metropolitan Opera Company educate "worthy students of music" and defray the cost of concerts and recitals for the enjoyment of the general public.

After providing for relatives and making bequests aggregating $700,000 to hospitals, charitable and other institutions, Juilliard's will reads that his estate is to be placed in the hands of trustees who will form a corporation to be known as The Juilliard Musical Foundation. As stated in the will, the foundation not only will help promising students of small means in obtaining "a complete and adequate" musical training, but will provide funds for them to go abroad and study under the world's best masters.

The entertainments, concerts and recitals are to be given, the will states, "without profit" and are to be "of a character appropriate for the education and entertainment of the general public in the musical arts." The aid which Juilliard's will provides is to be accorded the Metropolitan Opera Company is "for the purpose of assisting it in the production of operas."

To carry out the expressed wishes and general scope of "The Juilliard Foundation," ample discretion is vested in the trustees.

Juilliard's death occurred at his city home, 11 West Fifty-seventh street, on April 25 last. He had been a force in the financial and mercantile worlds of New York for half a century. He first stepped into the foreground of big business in 1873. The panic that year seriously involved the firm of Hoyt, Sprague & Co. He was appointed receiver and so conducted the business that attention was directed to him.

Soon afterward Juilliard organized the commission house of A. D. Juilliard & Co., which remains today one of the leading textile houses of the United States.

POLICEMAN SUSPENDED ON STATEMENT BY GIRL

Walter Neulist, Who Was Attacked When on Street With Her, Denies Her Story.

Patrolman Walter Neulist, Laclede Avenue Station, was ordered suspended by Chief O'Brien yesterday afternoon pending investigation of statements made by Clara Hall, a stenographer, 3687 Olive street, who accompanied the policeman Friday night when he was knocked unconscious by Fred Ziern, a butcher, 5308 Union avenue, at Spring and Washington avenues.

Neulist was in citizen's clothes and was on his way to a picture show with the girl, he declares, when Ziern came up behind them and knocked him down. Ziern was arrested by Sergt. Mackay and Neulist.

Following the assault police of the Laclede Avenue Station raided the home of Mrs. Marie Ziern, 53 years old, the prisoner's mother, at 3687 Olive street, and arrested three women and five men found there. They were held for investigation as to the nature of Mrs. Ziern's "rooming house."

Ziern refused to make any statement further than that the girl had lived at his mother's home for the last three weeks.

The girl at the station made a written statement to Capt. Tierney. She said that on June 23, while she was on her way to a restaurant to get sandwiches, she was stopped by Neulist, then also in citizen's clothes. He told her he was a policeman known as "Bud," she said, and told her she "had nothing to fear" as long as he was with her.

She said he insisted on accompanying her to a hotel, where he asked her to give him the $2 she carried and even searched her pocketbook for more money. She said he bought some beer and kept the change out of the $2.

After leaving the hotel, she said, he told her to meet him again Friday night and to bring more money along.

She said she kept the appointment Friday night and told the policeman she had no money.

"That's all right; I've got plenty," she said he told her, and started to walk on Spring avenue with her. They had gone but a short distance, she said, when Ziern struck Neulist from behind.

The policeman, after hearing the girl's story, made a written report in which he denied taking the girl to a hotel and denied asking her for money. He stated that he became acquainted with her on his beat.

Ziern, the Bertillon records show, was released from the Jefferson City penitentiary Feb. 27, 1919, after serving a two-year sentence on a burglary charge. The records show that he previously served a four-year term on a similar charge. Before the last trial he figured conspicuously in a kidnaping case in which witnesses for the State declared they were detained by Ziern's friends and drugged in order to be kept from court.

PAINTER'S BODY FOUND HANGING FROM GAS JET IN WORKSHOP

Wife's Letters, in Pocket, Upbraided Him for Not Sending Money to Her.

Charles Atkins, 40 years old, proprietor of a paint shop at 4027 North Broadway, was found dead, hanging from a gas jet, with a sheet around his neck, at noon yesterday, when police broke into the shop after an employe, Frank Shafer, 3815 North Broadway, had been unable to get any response to his knocks. Atkins had been dead several hours when found. The body was taken to the morgue.

Letters found in Atkins' pockets were from his wife, Mrs. Vade Atkins, at Garrett, Ind. They upbraided him for not sending more money for the upkeep of herself and four children and gave an itemized account of $150 worth of clothing needed at that time by the family. She also upbraided Atkins for not leaving his place here and joining the family there.

In the pockets police also found a receipt for a money order showing where Atkins had sent his wife $25 Friday night. A bank book showed he had but $4 left in the Baden Bank, after drawing out the $25.

UNION MAN SHOT AT MEETING

Fred Williamson, 24, a cement worker, 4321 Penrose avenue, was shot in the left leg by Charles Bird, 31, 4321 North Tenth street, at 9:15 last night, in Harugari Hall, Tenth and Carr streets, at a meeting of the Cement Workers' Union.

Two policemen who were standing at the Carr Street Police Station, across the street, heard the report and went to investigate. They found Williamson being restrained by a number of men from further attacking Bird, whom he had knocked down after being shot.

Both men were arrested and taken to the city hospital. Bird, who is the caretaker of the hall, said that Williamson criticised the way he kept hte hall. Williamson said Bird shot him without provocation.

POLK CONGRATULATES WILSON

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Immediately after receiving the news of the signing of the treaty, Acting Secretary Polk sent this message to the President over the special direct wire from the State Department to Versailles:

"Permit me to offer my heartfelt congratulations on the completion of your great work. The American people will be ever proud of what you did as their representative for the peace of the world."

King George Sends Message to Wilson on Signing of Peace

LONDON, June 28.

KING GEORGE has sent the following message to President Wilson:

"In this glorious hour when the long struggle of nations for right, justice and freedom is at last crowned by a triumphant peace, I greet you, Mr. President, and the great American people in the name of the British nation.

"At a time when fortune seemed to frown, and the issues of the war trembled in the balance, the American people stretched out the hand of fellowship to those, who on this side of the ocean were battling for a righteous cause. Light and hope at once shone brighter in our hearts, and a new day dawned.

"Together we have fought to a happy end; together we lay down our arms in proud consciousness of valiant deeds nobly done.

"Mr. President, it is on this day one of our happiest thoughts that the American and British people, brothers in arms, will continue forever to be brothers in peace. United before by language, traditions, kinship and ideals, there has now been set upon our fellowship the sacred seal of common sacrifice."

DR. WILKINS WEEPS IN CELL

By the Associated Press.

MINEOLA, L. I., June 27.—Dr. Walter Keene Wilkins, convicted yesterday of the murder of his wife, and awaiting sentence of death in the electric chair, broke down and wept in his cell today. He repeatedly declared that a "grave mistake" had been made in his conviction.

Guards at the jail, who have been doubled since Dr. Wilkins' conviction, walked past his cell at 15 minute intervals.

R-34 EXPECTED TO REACH UNITED STATES ON JULY 5 OR 6

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The British dirigible R-34 is expected to arrive in the United States on July 5 or 6 on the first flight across the Atlantic to be undertaken by a lighter-than-air craft.

This announcement was made here today by the British Air Attache, who requested that American merchant ships on the North Atlantic radio weather reports to Cape Race for both the outward and return voyage of the dirigible. The R-34 will land at Long Island, and will remain only long enough to replenish its fuel and gas supply.

SINN FEIN QUARTERS RAIDED

Large Force of Troops Searches Dublin Building.

DUBLIN, June 28.—Sinn Fein headquarters was raided this afternoon and the building searched by a large force of the military.

JOHNSON AND REED ATTACK THE LEAGUE

Californian and Missourian Open "Independence Preservation" Campaign.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Senator Hiram Johnson of California, Republican, and erstwhile Progressive, with Senator James A. Reed of Missouri, Democrat, attacked the League of Nations covenant bitterly tonight at Carnegie Hall, at the first rally of the newly-formed "League for the Preservation of American Independence, Inc., of which Henry Watterson is president.

Senator Johnson compared President Wilson to Czar Alexander I of Russia, and said that the people of this country have been taxed to spread propaganda designed to get popular support for the League of Nations. Having asserted that the league covenant had been drawn in secrecy, he made the statement that propaganda has been paid for "by millions and millions of dollars, wrung by taxation from an overburdened people."

Senator Reed declared that he refused "to enter into a co-partnership with 32 nations, not one of which in government, in civilization, in liberty, is the equal of the United States."

SPECIAL WIRE IS RESERVED TO FLASH PEACE TREATY NEWS

By the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The State Department issued this official statement on the special arrangements made for sending the news of the signing of the peace treaty to Washington:

"The first news of the signing of the greatest of all peace pacts was flashed to the United States today over a special Government circuit between Versailles and Washington. Over this wire of approximately 3000 miles of ocean cable and land telegraph set up for almost instantaneous transmission came to the department this first outline of the proceedings of the day, with London, New Foundland and New York the only points on the long stretch of line.

"The American mission at the peace conference had advised the department of State several days in advance that on the day of the signing the circuit would be arranged and messages sent over it from the mission at Versailles to be given immediately to the press to facilitate the news to the American public."

SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH'S REVIEW OF MARKET CONDITIONS

SIGNING OF PEACE TREATY FAILS TO ADVANCE STOCKS

Wall Street Market Is Firm, but No Excited Buying Follows the News.

Closing Prices on Liberty Bonds in New York.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Closing prices on Liberty Bonds today were: 3½s, 99.32; first 4s, 94.80; second 4s, 93.90; first 4¼s, 95.20; second 4¼s, 94.14; third 4¼s, 95.10; fourth 4¼s, 94.08; Victory 3¾s, 100.10; Victory 4¾s, 99.96.

By Leased Wire From the New York Bureau of the Post-Dispatch.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The Evening Post, in its copyrighted weekly financial review, says:

"Financial markets have a habit when news of high importance, but which is not a complete surprise, confront them, of acting in a manner which nobody had expected. This was so, as everyone remembers, the week when the armistice was signed. All Wall Street expected a stock market of wild excitement and violently rising prices; what the market did was to stand still, as if it took no interest in the news.

"When the world was awaiting Germany's acceptance of the final terms of peace there were two predictions. The market would rise enthusiastically because of the news, or it would decline on realizing sales, because 'the good news was all out.' The news was received an hour or two before the market closed Monday, but prices again stood practically motionless. During the rest of that week prices alternately declined and recovered; even the outside public's interest in the market slackened in such degree that the series of 'million-share days' was interrupted for the first time in 10 weeks.

Market Is Not Excited.

"The common explanation of both incidents is that no one can get excited over what everyone had expected; that when an event which had been the objective point of a long-continued speculation actually happens, the market will have lost its immediate objective. In other words, it must find some new basis for enthusiasm, and meantime will be apt to give more attention to other matters which had been neglected in the absorption of the financial mind in the one supreme consideration.

"Last November, as we now can see, the new considerations were the possibility (previously unsuspected) of the lapse of central Europe into Bolshevism, and the other possibility (previously ignored) of a precipitous decline in prices of our products, with resultant business reaction. These influences continued to dominate financial markets during the three ensuing months. It is very possible that we shall again have some new points of view to influence the market, with the treaty signed and the war officially ended.

"The evil possibilities are for the most part political. They exist because we do not yet know what will occur in central Europe after its final surrender, and perhaps because there is no absolute certainty, after the curious incidents of the last few weeks at Washington, as to what will happen with Congress in its present mood—as regards either the treaty, or the railways, or the general attitude toward legislation. For the moment, it is probably safe to say that no great anxiety exists in good financial circles over either consideration.

Conditions in Europe.

"It is possible that some unpleasant economic facts will come to light in Europe, when the belligerent states turn to the work of peace again. But one may reasonably doubt if any greater pessimism could arise, or the points of weakness and distress receive more emphasis than has been the case while Europe remained in the middle state, which was neither peace nor war.

"There will be many unexpected turns in the course of events economic. A week which, even before the signing of the treaty has witnessed the United States exporting gold in quantity, and the Belgian and German steel makers underselling England in the neutral markets, suggests a chapter of interesting development. But on the whole, with the work of reconstruction thoroughly under way, they should be of a character to cause reassurance, not despondency.

"As to what influence of financial sentiment and financial markets will be exerted by the coming season's economic developments in our own country, that depends almost entirely on the extent to which they have been anticipated and 'discounted' by the recent great rise on the Stock Exchange. That a season of extraordinary prosperity is ahead of the United States, with a quite unexampled display of economic strength, there is no doubt whatever."

London Review.

Special Cable to the Post-Dispatch and the New York Evening Post.

LONDON, June 28.—"It must be confessed that the prospects of peace, following upon the signing of the treaty, evokes little enthusiasm, partly because of hopes long deferred, and partly because of the unpleasant manifestation of Germany's state of mind in the scuttling of the surrendered war ships, and the destruction of the French flags. Mainly, however, the absence of elation is due to the magnitude of the problems confronting us with the return of peace.

"It is growingly recognized that the chief feature of the early days of peace is likely to be the disclosure of the magnitude of the financial effects of war. America alone among the chief belligerents shows overwhelming profits resulting from the conflict, for even European neutral countries, though full of gold and riches, are impoverished in materials. While the soundness and extent of your prosperity are undoubted, the colossal character of your financial and industrial activities, past and future, will probably test to the utmost your credit machinery.

"The decline in sterling exchange rates this week was natural and will go further unless you prevent it. It is believed that the next development will be the disclosure of your plans for granting further credits to Europe. The raising of the blockade is likely to occasion a further rise in commodity prices, owing to the demands of enemy countries, and your trade balance may become bigger still.

"Recommencement here of dealings in German exchange will probably be affected by the fact that the German banks no longer have offices in England. Some German imperial notes were offered in London this week, and changed hands on a basis which makes German exchange at London about 47.60 marks to the pound, or about 10.2 cents per mark in your money, against a pre-war normal quotation of 20.40 marks. It is expected, however, that this depreciation of the mark will be a great stimulus to German exports, enabling them to undersell competitors. It is not believed that our exports to you will increase vastly.

"One tendency which may occasion concern is an over-keen disposition both in America and England to snatch at new trade possibilities. Such a tendency may be aggravated by delay in restarting the industrial machinery consequent upon military demands upon manpower, as well as by labor difficulties and the price of coal, and by the demands, at high prices, of the devastated areas generally."

Wool Review.

BOSTON, June 28.—There has been a steady demand for wool in the market during the week, especially for wools grading three-eighths and finer, for which prices are firm and tending higher. There is a steady movement of wool in the West also on a strengthening market.

"The foreign markets are all strong except perhaps for inferior wool and the manufacturers in England. Like those in this country are sold ahead for several months. Mohair is in moderate demand at unchanged prices.

HOGS SELL FOR $21.95 AT NATIONAL STOCKYARDS

Only One Car Taken at That Level, However, and Dealers Term Price No Criterion of Market.

Reported for the Post-Dispatch by the National Livestock Commission Co., National Stockyards, Ill.

COMPARATIVE RECEIPTS.

	This Wk.	Last Wk.	Last Yr.
Cattle	19,426	17,486	25,280
Hogs	61,627	65,771	50,513
Sheep	20,093	22,581	18,972

In featuring the hog market last week trade showed first a new high record of price value and, second, the market was very erratic, but at no time did it get down to where it was week before last.

The $22 mark was almost reached yesterday, when a sale of a single car of fancy heavy hogs was made at $21.95. However, that deal was no criterion to judge the trade upon, because $21.85 was in reality the market's top. This represents a full dime advance over the former record of last Monday, when $21.75 was paid.

Yesterday the market was fully steady with Friday and bulk of the good hogs, 180 lbs. up, brought $21.25 to $21.75; 160 to 180-lbs., $20.30 to $21.25; 130 to 150 lb. pigs, $19.75 to $20.50; lighter pigs, $13 for common peewees up to $19.75 for good 115-lb. pigs. Rough hogs selling at $19.75.

The increased supply of cattle last week affected steer stuff, which broke 15c to 25c, on the strictly good fat light yearling butcher cattle, which averaged 50c lower than the preceding week. However, the market on canners, trashy stuff and fleshy grades of cattle was quite active, despite the heavier run and the market was fully steady if not strong for the period.

Fancy heavy beef steers are selling for $15.50 to $16; prime beef steers, $14.75 to $15.50; choice to prime, $13.75 to $14.75; good to choice, $12.25 to $13.75; medium to good, $11.25 to $12.25; common light fed steers, $9.75 to $10.75; good to choice heavy fleshy feeders, $10.75 to $11.75; good to choice feeders, $9.75 to $10.75; common to medium, $8.75 to $9.75. Good to choice stockers, $9 to $10.75; common to medium, $6.75 to $8.75. Choice to prime fat yearling butcher cattle, to $14.50; good to choice, $12 to $13; common to medium, $8.50 to $12. Choice to fancy heavy beef cows, $10.50 to $12; good to choice, $9 to $10.50; medium cows, $8 to $9; cutters, $7 to $8; canners, $6.25 to $8. Fat bulls, $10 to $11; heavy sausage bulls, $8.50 to $9.25; light sausage bulls, $7 to $8. Common quality fleshy yearlings, $7.25 to $8; same quality thin yearlings, $6.75 to $7.

The season for big sheep and lamb supplies is at hand, although last week's supply was a few thousand less than the week before. Nevertheless, lambs have suffered a loss of fully 75c per cwt. for the week and sheep 50c. But at the prices there has been a reasonably active movement to the trade, with a good clearance, though half-fat lambs have been much the hardest to sell of the various classes.

CORN MARKET IRREGULAR ON TRADING FOR THE WEEK

July Option Is Lower, While Distant Deliveries Score Fair Gains; Oats Show a Lower Drift.

Corn prices for the September and December deliveries advanced on the market here last week, influenced by the approach of the signing of the peace treaty and crop prospects. Until the agreement to sign became certain, July corn shared in the uplift, but later fell away on an absence of demand for immediate delivery. Yesterday when peace became an actuality, the market hardly moved. Compared with a week ago, at the close yesterday prices were 1⅛c to 2¾c higher for September and December corn, and 2½c to 3½c lower for July. Oats were ⅞c to 1½c lower.

In addition to the effect overseas news had on the market, the reduction of corn acreage, coupled with reports of adverse weather, helped to advance prices, which early in the week touched the high point for the July grain. The demand for the nearby month did not support advanced prices, however, despite record hog quotations.

Oats moved in sympathy with corn, crop conditions having a large bearing on the market fluctuations from day to day. As the week closed crop reports were mostly very favorable.

The Kansas winter wheat crop, now being harvested, was estimated at 229,217,000 bushels in the monthly report issued last week by J. C. Mohler, secretary of the State Board of Agriculture. This is an increase of more than 11,000,000 bushels over Mohler's May report and it is approximately 33,000,000 bushels greater than the last Federal monthly report.

Secretary Mohler explains that the surprising increase is due to the fact that the wheat acreage as recorded by County Assessors is more than 700,000 acres larger than that given out heretofore by the State Department, the new total being 11,564,693 acres. Today's report, on conditions found on June 21, forecasts an acre yield of 19.8 bushels as compared with 20.1 bushels, the May estimate.

For the first time an estimate is placed on the 1919 spring wheat in Kansas, which is estimated to yield 448,000 bushels, bringing the total all wheat yield of the State this year up to 229,665,000 bushels.

The report adds: "The total production promised this year is nearly equal to the State's three wheat crops of 1916, 1917 and 1918 combined and is 48,292,000 bushels in excess of the State's yield of 1914, which has stood until now as the record crop of any state in the United States.

The condition of the crop, based on 100 per cent as normal, is given as 92.4 per cent—a drop of 5.6 per cent during the past month, due to excessively wet weather.

SIGNING OF PEACE FAILS TO MOVE CHICAGO GRAIN

Corn and Oats Show Only Minor Price Changes After a Rather Sharp Break in Early Trading.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Actual signing of the peace treaty failed outright today to influence the corn market. Instead, prices were ruled by the necessity of month-end liquidation on the part of holders of July contracts. This liquidation had a depressing effect on the market as a whole, the treaty signing having been anticipated long beforehand.

Opening prices, which varied from ⅛c off to ¼c advance, with Sept. $1.75⅝ to $1.75¾, and Dec. $1.53¾ to $1.53⅞, were followed by a slight general upturn and then by a setback all around to below yesterday's finish.

Oats were dull and weak with corn. After opening ⅛c lower, including September at 68⅞c to 69c, the market hardened a trifle and then turned sharply downgrade.

Provisions held steady. Higher quotations on hogs, together with assertions that export trade would be enlarged were against any decline.

In the last part of the session rallies took place as a result of covering by shorts. The market closed unsettled ⅛c net lower to ½c advance, with Sept. $1.75¾ to $1.75⅞, and Dec. $1.53⅞ to $1.53⅝.

BETTER WEATHER OUTLOOK DROPS COTTON 45 POINTS

Market Fails to Respond to Signing of Peace Treaty; Recent Advance in Anticipation of Event.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The signing of the peace treaty caused no excitement in the cotton market today and prices were lower under realizing or liquidation for over the approaching Government report and on prospects for clearing weather. October contracts sold off from 33.91 to 33.27, and closed at 33.32, with the general list closing steady at a net decline of 32 to 45 points.

There was some buying early on another private crop report making the condition only 68.6, or the lowest figure so far mentioned. After opening barely steady at an advance of 3 points to a decline of 20 points the market sold about 15 to 20 points net higher with December touching 33.80. The demand was soon supplied, however, and profit taking became more active after the publication of the eastern and western belt forecasts pointing to more favorable weather conditions.

December broke to 32.20 with active months generally selling 36 to 45 points net lower and closing within a few points of that level.

Cable advices stated that Lancashire operatives had voted whether to accept the proposed 48-hour week and 30 per cent advance in wages and that it was generally expected they would resume work Monday.

Reports from the domestic goods trade indicated a large volume of business at first hands, but said that curtailment of mill production at Fall River was being increased by operatives' vacations and labor troubles in one of the leading plants. Sales of print cloths at Fall River for the week were larger than for any previous week this month, being estimated at 220,000 pieces.

The amount of cotton on shipboard at the end of the week showed a considerable increase amounting to 194,102 bales against 75,201 last year.

Cotton futures closed irregular: July, 33.34c; October, 33.32c; December, 33.20c; January, 33c; March 32.88c.

I have an oil lease located in the best shallow field district in the United States. Several oil wells adjoin this property; therefore, it looks like a sure shot for oil and should be drilled immediately. I am so confident that this lease will produce oil in good-paying quantities that I am perfectly willing to offer it free for drilling, with the understanding that unless you bring in a fine oil well you need not buy it. Nothing could be fairer, as I guarantee production or no sale. The test well will cost about $2500 to drill, and should you obtain oil it means a fortune. Can you get together a small syndicate among your friends and acquaintances to handle this proposition? If so, write me at once for maps and full particulars.

A Pitcher Who Is There With the Whitewash Is Sure to Get in the Limelight

Gedeon's Error Is Break That Wins for Chicago Sox

Fumble and Wild Throw Put Men on Second and Third for Joe Jackson.

HEAVY ARTILLERY FAILS

Inability of Sisler and Jacobson to Hit in Pinches Contributes to 3—2 Defeat.

Reasons for yesterday's 3 to 2 defeat for the Browns at the hands of the Chicago White Sox are numerous. Chief among them, however, are Gedeon's wild throw, which enabled the Sox to tally two runs; Gerber's failure to tag Schalk out stealing and the inability of Sisler and Jacobson to hit safely with men on base.

As a result of the loss, which was witnessed by about 8000 spectators, the Browns are two full games out of the first division, Detroit landing its third straight conquest over the Indians. The victory put the Sox back in second place.

The game was another well pitched affair, with Claude Williams, the Sox southpaw, holding Burke's charges to five safeties, while his mates rapped Shocker for six hits in the seven frames he worked. Koob held the Gleasonites hitless in the two rounds he labored. Enough sensational plays were pulled to keep the crowd on edge all the way.

Shocker's Wildness Hurts.

After going along in great style for five rounds, during which time he held the slugging Sox to three safe raps, Shocker contributed to his own downfall in the sixth, when he passed Eddie Collins, the first batter. Weaver hit to Gedeon, who first fumbled and then threw to the grand stand, Collins getting to third and Weaver to second.

That proved the "break of the game. Joe Jackson, who has a habit of hitting in the pinch against the Browns, sent one to center for a base, Collins and Weaver tallying. These two runs gave the Sox an edge, which they never lost.

In the next round, with one out, Schalk singled to left on a quick delivery from Shocker, after Schalk had kicked on a called strike. With the call 2—2 on Williams, Schalk went down to second and reached there safely, when Gerber failed to tag him, after receiving Severeid's perfect throw. Then Williams walked. Leibold forced the hurler, but Collins singled, scoring Schalk.

Browns Score in Second.

The Browns put over their first run in the second inning. With the call 2—2, Jacobson was hit in the ribs by a pitched ball, after one had been retired. Earl Smith bumped one against the left field fence for two bases, Jacobson scoring, but he himself was out at the far corner on perfect throws from Jackson and Weaver to McMullin.

After this the Burkeviki failed to do anything worth while until the seventh. Then with one down, Smith again started trouble for Williams, with a double to left center. Gerber hung around until he coaxed a pass. Severeid slammed the first ball for a single to left on which Smith tallied. Billings, pinching for Shocker, fanned and Austin flied out.

About Browns' Failures.

And now a few words about the Browns' batting failures. Johnny Tobin opened the fourth with a double, and went to third on Sisler's long fly. Jacobson fanned and Smith flied deep to Felsch.

Again in the eighth, with one down, Tobin singled to center. Sisler once more failed to hit safely, forcing the outfielder, while Jacobson popped to Collins.

Except for the innings in which he was scored upon, Shocker was in trouble only once. That was in the fourth, when Collins opened with a double. Weaver tapped in front of the plate. Severeid picked up the sphere and tossed to Austin in time to get Collins. Jackson walked, but Gandil and Felsch went out.

Gallia Down to Pitch.

For the fourth and final game with the White Sox today, Bert Gallia, who generally fools Gleason's men, will be sent to hurling hill by Jimmy Burke. He will draw either Frank Shellenbach or our old friend, Grover Lowdermilk, as his opponent.

Felsch and "Jake" Star.

The feature fielding plays of the game were turned by the two center fielders. In the second, Felsch made a sensational running catch of Sisler's drive, robbing the local star of a sure triple. In the next frame, Jacobson ran almost behind second base for a low liner from Williams.

McMullin "Bawls" Smith.

McMullin, who went to third for the White Sox, when Risberg was benched, bawled Earl Smith for jumping into third spikes first in the second round. Smith was going into the bag trying to make three bases on his double to left.

Williams Again Ready.

Kenneth Williams, the outfielder, who injured his leg on the last home stand of the club, is again ready to break into the line up. However, it is doubtful if he will be used until one of the present meadowmen slump.

Tobin Still Hitting.

Johnny Tobin, St. Louis boy, is still hitting. He had two out of four against Williams yesterday, giving him nine hits in 14 attempts for an average of .643 for the trio of battles with the Sox. Six of the safeties were made off southpaw pitchers. And Johnny is a left-hand hitter.

Bikers Go to Belleville.

The weekly run of the St. Louis Cycling Club today will be to Belleville, Ill. The start will be made from Eads Bridge at 8:30 o'clock this morning.

Mays Breaks Even Pitching 2 Games

Red Sox Right-Hander Wins Opener From Yanks, 2—0, but Loses Second, 4—1.

NEW YORK, June 28—After shutting out New York 2 to 0 in the first game, Carl Mays of Boston failed in his "Iron Man" stunt when the Yankees batted him hard in the early innings of the second contest, winning 4 to 1. Mays was the first major league pitcher to pitch a double-header this season. Although the Red Sox outbatted New York in the second game, their hits were kept scattered by Shore: Score:

Cardinals Lose to Bruins in a Weird Game, 6-5

Knot-Holers Get Away to a Four-Run Lead, but Are Unable to Hold It.

FREAK PLAY IN NINTH

Lavan Bats Out of Turn, but No One Notices Mistake Until He Pops Out.

CHICAGO, June 28.—In a wild and wooly game that was chock full of extra athletes, several extra base hits and weird plays, Branch Rickey's Cardinals went down before the Cubs this afternoon, 6 to 5.

The weirdest play of all occurred in the ninth frame, when Doc Lavan became so confused that he batted out of turn. So dizzy had the experts and fans been made by the whirl of events no one realized Doc's mistake until he had popped out.

The visitors got away to a four-run lead, but that was nothing in the life of the Cubs. Goodwin was hurling and lasted until the third, when Mitchell's men chased over three runs. Sherdel followed him, then came Tuero. Jake May was heaving 'em at the finish.

Tyler Goes Out Early.

Lefty Tyler of the locals attempted to hurl his first game since recovering from a lame back. He didn't last long, hardly long enough for the cash customers to get a glimpse of him. Smith walked to open the game, stole second and then when Miller slammed out a single Mitchell wigwagged Tyler into the safety of the dugout.

A. Lincoln Bailey replaced him whereupon the Cards blew themselves to a 2-run lead. That single of Miller's scored Smith. Hornsby was given a life on Magee's fumble, allowing Miller to move up. Shotton scored the latter with a one-base rap to right. Miller was in the calcium glow again in the second when he tripled with Lavan and Smith on base. Singles placed those athletes on the runways.

With that much to work on Rickey's men were unable to hold their lead. A pass to Magee and Paskert's single scored the first marker for the Cubs in the second. Three more went over in the next round and Goodwin went to the cooler. When Sherdel let the fourth Cub run trickle over on a wild pitch Tuero went in.

Hornsby Gets Home Run.

Rogers Hornsby lifted a homer into the bleachers in the sixth, putting the visitors ahead, but the Cubs climbed on Tuero and counted two in the last half. They held their lead for the rest of the distance.

Charley Hollocher, the St. Louis boy with the Cubs, is having more bad luck. While batting before the game today he was struck in the mouth by the ball and suffered a severe cut on his lip. He is just recovering from a broken finger.

SUPERBAS WIN DOUBLE HEADER FROM PHILLIES

BROOKLYN, N. Y., June 28.—Brooklyn beat Philadelphia twice today by 2 to 0 and 6 to 3. Cadore and Rixey fought a pitchers' battle in the first game, each allowing only three hits. Brooklyn batted Jacobs hard in the second game while Mamaux kept the visitors' hits well scattered. Ward made his debut at third with Brooklyn. Score:

TENNIS BOOM ABROAD CAUSES CONFLICT OF TOURNAMENT DATES

NEW YORK, June 28.—Now that lawn tennis has spread its popularity abroad so that several competitive meetings find a place each week on the schedule there is an unfortunate number of conflicts. There is not a sufficient number of star players to meet the requirements of the various tournament managers, and a more systematic scheduling of competitive dates is evidently one of the most pressing reforms at the moment.

The arrival of the American team in England for the interallied tournament, the beginning of the all-England championships on the historic turf of Wimbledon, London, for the first time since the season of 1914, and the preparations for the Davis international cup matches, which are to follow at Wimbleton, afford evidence that the game of the courts is booming on the other side of the Atlantic.

All of the competitive meetings in England have attracted bumper entry lists of the highest class. Likewise all of the tournaments in this country are showing a remarkable revival of interest on the part of players and followers of the game.

The veterans are displaying increased interest and returning to the competition and in addition there is a wonderful crop of newer and younger players showing marked ability and skill. It is now certain that the American season is to have an international climax with the appearance of the Australian team, which is expected to arrive here in time for the tournaments at Newport, Southampton and the national championship at Forest Hills in August.

Peckinpaugh Takes Lead in A. L. Swatting Race From Tyrus Cobb

ROGER PECKINPAUGH, star shortstop of the New York Yankees, during the week raised his batting figure for the season to .395 and took the lead from Ty Cobb, who was idle because of illness. Cobb has a .358 mark. George Sisler, the Browns' star, is in fifth place, with a mark of .337. He is the only Brown in the select circle.

In the National, Cravath is still high with .408, while Jim Thorpe is at .407. Bert Shotton, 310; Clemons, .306, and Hornsby, .303, are the Cardinals' select circle clouters.

When Champion Willard Says He's Fit as a Fiddle, Perhaps He's Only Stringing Us

Willard to Rely On Uppercuts and Left Hand Stabs

Champion Says He Also Uses a Neck Punch With Frequent Knockout Results.

PLANS TO CHECK RUSHES

Title-Holder Thinks His Specialties Are "Poison" to Terry McGovern Style.

By Jess Willard.

(Copyright, 1919, Bell Syndicate, Inc.)

TOLEDO, O., June 28.—How will I win the championship of Fourth of July? What blow or blows will I most rely upon to beat my opponent?

These are questions that are fired at me most frequently these days. In reply to the first question I will say that I have no cut-and-dried plan for the fight. My chief reliance will be upon my left hand. In making this decision I am taking full advange both of my unusual height and my great reach. A straight left, delivered with a snap, is one of the most successful discouragers that any boxer can run up against. No matter how ambitious a fellow may be, if he finds a left jab waiting to crack him every time he bores in, he will soon lose his ambition.

I can extend my reach several inches by crouching forward, and I thus protect my abdomen, or I can, by straightening up and leaning backward, protect my jaw and still have several inches advantage in reach with my long left.

Long practice with my left arm has made it a knockout weapon. I have perfected a hook with it, which travels less than a foot, with deadly effect. A left upper cut is another novelty that I use from a shift. Mainly, though, the left will be used to jab off my opponent.

Jess's Uppercut His Favorite.

Next in my list of favorite blows is the right uppercut. As I have said before, this is my one natural blow. It is the punch that I brought with me into the ring. Nobody had to teach it. I use it instinctively, and, like everything a person does naturally, I get good results from it. It is a punch that is not telegraphed. It is delivered with a sudden snap, from the normal defensive position. No opponent can tell that it is coming until it is on its way. When delivered with full force I bend both knees slightly and rise to the balls of both feet, when the punch is at the top of its swing. It is at its best when used against a boxer of the Terry McGovern type, a fellow who bores in blindly, trying with both hands for the mid-section.

When such a fellow comes in, I deliberately let him slip past my long left and catch him on the fly with my right uppercut. If I time it correctly, and I have been practicing along that line, it is almost a sure knockout, no matter where it is delivered.

Those who were a the ringside the last time Heinen was knocked out saw an uppercut that was partially pulled to land flush on Heinen's mouth. He was knocked out just as completely as though it had landed on his jaw. It will put a man away for the count. If it lands under the heart, anywhere near the solar plexus, on the throat or the jaw, even when it don't knock a man out, it weakens him greatly and makes him easy for the finishing touch.

Neck Punch Another Asset.

Another blow that has been seen in action out at my arena almost as frequently as the left jab, is my neck punch. This lands back of the opponent's ear. It comes with a downward hammer-like blow. This also is delivered when an opponent is rushing into close quarters and is most effective when it drops on a man while he is clinched. No defense has been perfected against it. And I believe that none will be found for it before July 4. The boxing fans who have gone out to my arena day after day have seen this neck punch so often that they watch for it and point it out to newcomers. They have seen it knock out Soldier Stanton and Jack Heinen. These are by no means all of the offensive punches in my bag of tricks. I may have a few new samples to show on July 4.

STATE PARK WILL BE SELECTED IN 90 DAYS

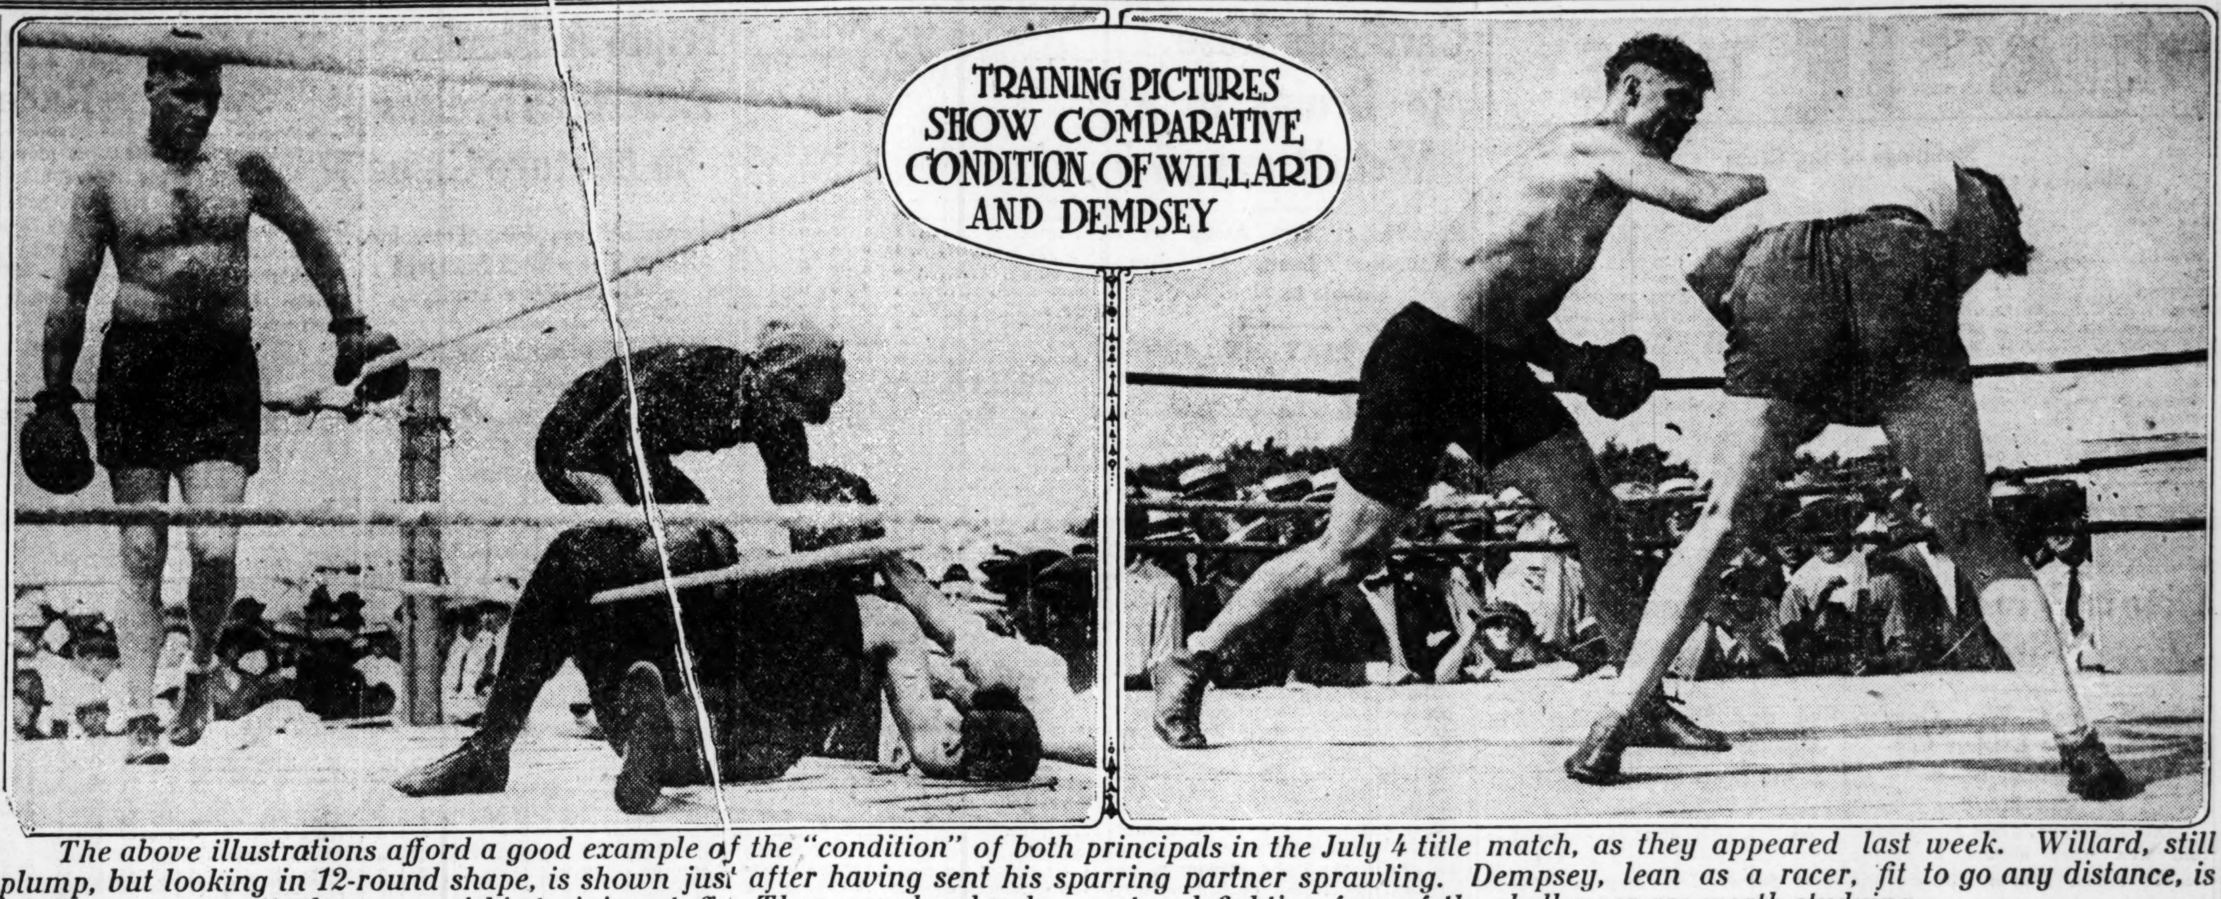
Tim Birmingham, State Game and Fish Commissioner, at a meeting held at the American Hotel, yesterday, announced that Gov. Gardner, Attorney-General Frank W. McAllister and himself, being the committee of three appointed by the Legislature, would select a site for the first State Park during the next 90 days.

The committee is looking for four to 10 thousand acres of picturesque wild land with a large area of water and plenty of timber, located somewhere in the Ozark Mountains.

Anyone having a suitable location for the proposed site for the State Park can send location, with description and price to Tim Birmingham, State Game and Fish Commissioner, Jefferson City, Mo. The tracts offered, if suitable for park purposes, will be inspected by the committee.

HENDRYX LEADS A. A. SWATTERS WITH .397

Tim Hendryx, the former Brown, is the batting leader of the American Association, with an average of .397, which is 29 points better than the figure owned by Beals Becker, another former major leaguer, who is second. Ward Miller, another former Brown, has a .332 average. Bruno Betzel, one-time Cardinal, has a .314 figure with Louisville. Bob Bescher tops the base stealers with 19 pilfers.



TRAINING PICTURES SHOW COMPARATIVE CONDITION OF WILLARD AND DEMPSEY

The above illustrations afford a good example of the "condition" of both principals in the July 4 title match, as they appeared last week. Willard, still plump, but looking in 12-round shape, is shown just after having sent his sparring partner sprawling. Dempsey, lean as a racer, fit to go any distance, is starting a savage attack on one of his training staff. The muscular development and fighting face of the challenger are worth studying.

Willard's Bulk and a Good Left Hand His Only Points of Superiority in Title Go Challenger Dempsey Looms Up as Equal or Superior to Champion, in All Other Essentials That Go to Make Up a Fighting Man.

By John E. Wray.
Sporting Editor of the Post-Dispatch.

SIZE will be the dominant feature of the greatest pugilistic spectacle ever planned, the 12-round contest at Toledo, July 4, when Jack Dempsey, the virile, ambitious challenger, meets Jess Williard, the mercenary, 37-year-old giant who has not defended his title in a decision contest since he won it, April 5, 1915.

The size of the champion establishes a record for altitude, weight and reach; the size of the honorarium to be given the fighters ($127,500) exceeds by one-fourth the greatest sum ever put up for a similar event; the size of the arena, seating an estimated total of 80,000, gives it a 10,000 larger capacity than the great Yale Bowl and second only to the ancient Colosseum at Rome; the size of the anticipated gate (maximum $1,000,000) will far outclass any total ever paid for admission fees to a sporting or any other amusement feature.

In fact, the spectacle will, beyond all cavil, transcend every show of its kind, save only in one particular, and that is in the important respect of FIGHTING. At this time the question of what the battle will turn out to be, as a ring exhibition, is befogged in doubt and uncertainty.

Whether the 50,000 or more pop-eyed fans will see the frailer Dempsey exhaust himself in fruitless assaults on the human Gibraltar Willard, or behold the middle-aged giant gradually cut down by youthful endurance; whether they will see the mighty wagon tongue left arm of Williard reach out and efface Dempsey from the ring at one poke, or observe the knockout king of all heavyweights sink his powerful forearm into the solar plexus of his giant foe for a "kayo"; or whether they will view 12 rounds of tame hugging and clinging to a meaningless decision, are merely matters of conjecture.

Guessers Still Guessing.

After looking over the work of both principals at intervals during their training preparation, there is scarcely one of the "experts" on the ground at Toledo, even among those that have had the hardihood to name a winner, who has not had secret misgivings that he may be "all wrong." The army of guessers, that has been vivisecting the possibilities of the encounter for the past month, is still guessing.

As a matter of fact, the selection of a prospective winner is rendered all but impossible by lack of CERTAIN knowledge of the champion's stamina, today, and the extent to which he has regained boxing ability after practically four years' absence from the fighting game.

Reduced to Actualities.

AFTER looking over both men and burning the midnight kilowatt hour over their records and previous battles, one finds unanswerable questions on both sides. Of the known dependable facts concerning both fighters, we may tabulate the following in favor of the respective adversaries:

DEMPSEY.

Youth (12 years younger).	Ring ambition.
Speed.	Physical condition.
Constant fighting.	Fighting temperament.
Better record.

WILLARD.

Size.	Weight.

Perhaps the most important subject under discussion, as between the two fighters, is the question of condition. On this point Dempsey may be dismissed with the remark that unless something happens to him before fight time he will be in as fine physical fettle as it is possible for a human power plant to be.

With Willard, however, the matter of condition is a vital one, especially since it is coupled with middle-age. Willard as I saw him ten days before he was to step into the ring, considered from the standpoint of a man who was to engage in a FINISH fight for the world's title against an equal, was NOT fit. Willard bore abdominal fat, with a thin layer all over him which hid his muscular definition everywhere. He worked out slowly, lazily and seemingly insufficiently for a supreme test. If he showed no signs of defective breathing it may have been due to the insufficiency of his workout. It is an admitted fact that he quit road work because it weakened him; and upon road work depends a fighter's wind development.

Willard Fit to Fight 12 Rounds.

BUT we do not mean to say that Willard is not able to go 12 rounds—an entirely different proposition from fighting until one of two opponents is unable to continue. Willard, by standing in one position and waiting for the little man to carry the attack to him, conserving his own strength thereby as he did three years before, in his Moran bout, can doubtless survive the 12 rounds, unless hit vitally. His own efforts will not exhaust him in that time. It must be remembered that Jack Johnson was fatter than Willard now is, when he faced Jess at Havana; and yet it was 26 rounds before he finally fell exhausted, from his own efforts and Willard's punches. It will also be recalled that the fat, middle-aged darky was good enough to carry the fight to his younger and better condition opponent for 15 rounds or more.

This seems to justify the belief that Willard, who compared to Johnson, has lived cleanly and without dissipation, ought to be able to show everything he displayed at Havana and to just as good advantage, over the shorter distance at Toledo.

More against him than his rather sloppy-looking physical shape is his age. At 37, blows landed on vital points have a more lasting effect than at 24. Willard, if hurt, will require rounds where Dempsey might require seconds to recover from an equally powerful punch.

And yet we may cite here the case of "Tham" Langford, who has been displaying a watermelon front greater than any Willard ever owned, for several years. Although quite as old as the champion, up to a year ago he was still flattening the best and biggest of his rivals.

But Dempsey, fit to the minute, will have the speed and strength to carry Willard at a pace he never yet faced. In all his life the big fellow probably never saw gloves fly as fast as he will next Friday. And the pace of the fighting it is possible may affect the champion's wind to the point of collapse in the 12 rounds. This is possible but not probable.

Dempey's Record as to Punch.

ANOTHER question to be considered is what capacity has Dempsey, 55 pounds lighter than his opponent, for punishing his foe? Dempsey is said to be the hardest hitting heavyweight of his poundage in the game. He has a long record of quick knockouts, shown elsewhere; included among them are kayoes of Fred Fulton, Battling Levinsky, Gunboat Smith and other well-known heavyweight factors of other days. Most of the knockouts were achieved over fighters of little consequence; but the fact that he has stopped them at all indicates he has a destructive power to his blows. In his last year or more of fights his opponents have lasted an average of only 2½ rounds against him. Only two men have been able to stand against him—Billy Miske and Willie Meehan, both of whom have escaped unhurt on more than one occasion from contests with Dempsey. As to the power of his drive to hurt big sequoias like Willard it may be noted that he beat Carl Morris in four rounds and twice stopped him in shorter fights, the last time taking only one round. Fred Fulton lasted only 20 seconds and the redoubtable Gunboat Smith stuck around for three periods.

It has been said that many of his foes were "set-ups" and that on two occasions the enemy was "double crossed." That is, they had been told Dempsey would not take advantage of their bad physical condition, but would let him "stay." Instead, they charge, he put them away. But it is not conceivable that all of Dempsey's record is made up by such padding. It seems evident that he has a real punch with a "kayo" kick in it. If it stopped Morris and Fulton, it ought to hurt Willard, if not put him out of the running.

There is really much more doubt about Willard's punch than about Dempsey's. Wonderful stories of Willard's punching power have been told. One of these was to the effect that he hit an opponent so hard, on one occasion, that his foe was knocked through the ropes, carrying the ring posts and all several yards.

It is recited that he killed "Bull Young" with one blow; that he knocked out one Soldier Kearns by smashing him on the back of the neck; that he has to pull his punches in training to keep from severely injuring his partners. BUT—

Jess' Punch in Doubt.

WILLARD'S tremendous punch has been strangely missing from his record which shows that Jack Johnson was the only opponent of class whom he "stopped" in all his career—and he failed to knock Johnson out, in the sense of dazing him. Johnson fell half from exhaustion and half from his opponent's punch.

For the rest Tom McMahon, weight 180 pounds, carried him 12 rounds and outpointed him. Gunboat Smith, weight 185 pounds, fought Jess 20 rounds and gained a decision. Charley Miller, a terrible "frost," fought a draw with Willard.

The best man besides Johnson that Willard was able to beat was Boer Rodel, a fourth rater weighing 180 pounds.

The records contain little evidence of a man-killing punch. Contrast it with Dempsey's history, which shows he leveled three of the men Willard faced but failed to defeat. Dempsey stopped Carl Morris twice, the last time in a single round; knocked out Gunboat Smith in the third round, and finished Charley Miller in less than a round.

It is certainly not inconsistent to deduce that Willard's blow will be no more formidable against Dempsey than it was against Gunboat Smith or Tom McMahon, both of whom are said to be smaller men than the challenger.

In measuring the value of punches, however, the most important feature of the fight develops—that is: What difference will Willard's size make. On the face of the figures the same difference exists as between a first-class battleship and a light cruiser. Sixty pounds of weight means, or should mean, that the champion has 33 per cent greater resisting power; or that the challenger's blows will lose one-third of their effectiveness as compared with their effect against a man of Dempsey's own size. There is no doubt that whatever the drive behind Dempsey's blow, it will encounter tremendous resisting power, backed up by proven courage and stamina.

Willard Hard to Hurt.

WILLARD may not be the man-killer with a knockout, but it seems evident from his record that he is an extremely difficult man to hurt, even when hit—and he is also a tough proposition to land on effectively. He is so tall he leans back out of reach of the blows of smaller men. At times he crouches and extends his wagon-tongue left arm a la Jeffries, and on such occasions it is impossible to reach his head or his body. If he had been boxing regularly Willard could be considered a hard target for a smaller man. Just how difficult he will be to reach at this time, after four years of "resting" is a question for the guessers.

Willard has been out of the ring for over three years. It is sufficient time to ruin his judgment of distance, timing and automatic defense. Willard a few days ago showed by his facial contortions that he is not yet back in boxing form. When a fighter twists his features, mouth, blinks and enlarges his eyes like a frightened child, whenever his opponent leads at his head, it is rather clear that his mind and his muscular actions are not teaming together very well. It leads to the suspicion that he might be rattled by a swift attack and be hurt before he could rally his defense. Willard, too, appeared to time his blows poorly and to be too slow to take advantage of openings. This, too, was against partners with whom he had been boxing off and on for four or five years and whose every move he should have been able to anticipate.

To the minds of some of the experts on the ground at Toledo, this seemed one of the most serious defects in Willard's present condition.

The Willard supporters all pooh-pooh the suggestion that the champion's boxing is not just as good as it was at Havana. Judging by the news accounts of the first 15 rounds of the fight, it was not very much to brag about, down in Cuba, until the black man began to tire from his own exertions.

DEMPSEY men say that no matter how big Willard is, if Jack lands fairly he'll bring him down. Walking from one camp to the other and viewing the men in workouts a few minutes apart, this statement doesn't make much of a hit. Dempsey seems too pitifully small to make a dent in the monster from Kansas. Such is the effect of bulk.

There is not the slightest doubt, however, as to which fighter the public wants to see win—Dempsey is the popular if not the betting choice. Willard, coldly commercial, acquired the title and used it solely as an advertisment for his circus performances. The fact that since winning the title he has fought but one no-decision struggle, opposing a man 50 pounds lighter than himself, has not endeared him to the public.

And yet Willard is an amiable, pleasing personality. He is youthful for his years. He is approachable and naturally considerate of manner. In the ring he smiles, but at times displays temper—the possession of which is indicated by his projecting frontal bone and heavy brows. His courage and gameness have been proven and he leaves the impression of being a man who would have to be beaten to the floor before he would surrender. He could have been a wonderfully popular champion had he showed more interest in the game and not made it so plain that his sole interest lay in the financial aspect of the sport.

Dempsey, because of youth virility, boyish eagerness, willingness to defend the title if he wins it and—this plays a large part—because he will be the under dog in point of size, will be the hope of the majority. Whether he will be favorite in financial speculation at ringside remains to be seen. The chances now seem to favor Willard ruling at least 7 to 5 choice, when the opening gong sounds.

Is Champion 37 Years Old or 37 Years Young? Blood Pressure Normal

IF the old saying that "a man is as old as his arteries" holds good, Jess Willard is no better and no worse than any man 37 years old, physically. It has been said that Willard was "37 years young," but a recent examination made of both men carries this statement as to Willard's blood pressure: "Normal for his age." Otherwise, Jess stands a very fine physical examination, as compared to Dempsey, as follows:

JESS WILLARD.

Weight—250 pounds.

Eyes—Clear and bright, denoting clean liver.

Flesh—Soft and round.

Hands and Feet—Large, no malformations.

Blood Pressure—Normal for age.

Wasserman Test—Negative.

Heart Action—Normal.

Pulse—Regular.

Inhalation—Fair.

JACK DEMPSEY.

Weight—201 pounds.

Eyes—Sharp, keen and of ferret type.

Flesh—Smooth and hard.

Hands and Feet—Practically perfect.

Blood Pressure—Perfect.

Wasserman Test—Negative.

Heart Action—Very good.

Pulse—Strong.

Inhalation—Slow and strong with no murmur.

Willard Drops Hempel With Right-Hand Punch—Also Boxes With Monahan.

CHALLENGER IS BUSY

Dempsey Goes Eight Rounds, Four With Tate and a Like Number With Malone.

TOLEDO, O., June 28. — Surging crowds of autoists, women and plain boxing "fans" packed the training camps of Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey today and fought for advantageous points for observation to see the heavyweight rivals go through their paces in preparation for their championship contest next Friday. The crowds were the largest that have visited either camp.

Dempsey boxed three fast rounds with Jock Malone and Sergt. Bill Tate, while Willard traveled only six rounds instead of the usual eight. The champion boxed three rounds with Jack Hempel and three with Walter Monahan, knocking Hempel down with a right-hand punch in the second round.

The "Jamaica Kid" of Dempsey's sparring staff refused to box with the challenger because, he said, his jaw and stomach were sore from the punishment of previous days.

Tate, it was claimed, declined to get into the ring until assured that Dempsey would box easily.

Champion Displays Speed.

The champion displayed more speed and "snap" in his workout than he has in a week and his showing drew praise from Tommy Ryan of middleweight championship fame, who declared, after the workout, that Willard was in condition to defend his title which some of his critics doubt.

"I am of the opinion that Willard is in condition to fight," Ryan said, "and that he will be at his very best when he answers the bell next Friday. That means he will be a big, formidable fighter. Dempsey may beat him, but if he does, he will beat the real Jess Willard. His boxing today was a surprise to me. He has a good left hand, with snap behind it. His right uppercut is an effective punch, and he uses it wonderfully well."

TOLEDO MAY BE DRY, BUT YOU WON'T NEED A FLASK AT THE FIGHT

TOLEDO, O., June 28.—The old-time follower of prize fights who sighs for the good old free and easy days, and is inclined not to take in the world's championship bout between Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey here on July 4 because he fears the "scenery" will be lacking, might as well make application for his ticket and come along.

Toledo may not be wide open, but the latchstring is out, and it hangs in a very conspicuous place everywhere. Ohio, within whose border Toledo happens to be, went dry in May amid a wailing and gnashing of teeth—that is, when Toledoans got over the effect of the glorious night before.

Only as an excuse was that night before necessary. Things have been going on much as usual, even at the same old stands, if you pull the latchstring right.

Every hotel bar and cafe is open, dispensing near-beer and concoctions known as "Rum O." "That's It." "Honolulu Kid," "Spotlight" and "Benedictine." If you don't know these and are afraid there may be knockout drops in them, it don't take much talk to get a real drink, such as a highball, gin fizz or real beer, provided you have the price.

Dice are heard clicking on nearly every cigar counter, poker chips are on sale at every well regulated news stand, pools are open on the ball games and are under way already on the Dempsey-Willard match.

The Kind of Fighting Spirit That Wins World's Titles Is Instilled, Not Distilled

Lynch Sets New Tourney Record On Public Links

Scores 73 in Qualifying Round of Forest Park Golf Club Championship.

PLAYS LAST NINE IN PAR

Bockenkamp, Manion and Other Stars to Make Medal Round Today.

Frank Lynch, holder of the Forest Park Golf Club and municipal golf titles, yesterday established a new record for tournament play over the public links in Forest Park, when he scored a 73 in the qualifying round of the annual Forest Park G. C. tournament.

This score has been equaled by other golfers, but never in competition. The record mark was only made possible by phenomenal play on the homeward nine holes after the municipal champion had taken a 39 going out. Lynch's 34 for the last nine is par golf. His card for the day follows:

Out ....5 4 3 5 6 3 4 4 5—39
In .....2 5 4 4 4 4 4 3 4—34—73

James Manion, former State champion; Richard Bockenkamp, recent runner-up in the Trans-Mississippi and Western tournies; Fred Conway, George Pep and L. J. Hamel, other municipal course stars, did not play yesterday, but will play their medal round today.

Aside from Lynch's play the first day's scores were high ,none of the entrants getting under 80. However, some attractive marks are expected today.

The day's scores follow:

G. E. Hopkins, 93; Gus Gross, 98; F. F. Offill, 100; Frank Lynch, 73; R. E. Hallett, 91; D. R. Reed, 102; J. E. Cool, no card; A. R. McKinley, 109; L. J. Slocum, 98; A. Lopez, 104; W. G. MACKIE WITH 84 LOW IN QUALIFYING ROUND OF RIDGEDALE TOURNEY

W. M. Mackie turned in a card of 84 for medalist honors in the qualifying round play of the annual Ridgedale Golf Club championship tournament yesterday afternoon.

More than 90 members played the medal round for entry into the title flight. Besides the championship pairings, three other classes have been arranged.

Other low scores for yesterday's play were: T. J. Moss, 88; J. A. Hooke, 89; W. Thompson, 89; J. A. Aid, 93; Ralph S. Rhoades, 93.

First round championship pairings are as follows:

W. S. Mackie vs. E. Hatfield.
C. C. Connor vs. K. L. Parker.
R. S. Rhoades vs. R. O. Kennard.
J. A. Hooke vs. Walter Kobush.
W. H. Thompson vs. Dr. W. S. Gephardt.
J. A. Aid vs. B. F. Edwards.
Fred Campbell vs. C. Reese Jr.
H. C. Whiteside vs. T. J. Moss.

Unless there is an increase in entries for the annual Forest Park Golf Club women's championship tournament, that play will be abandoned. Medal play is to be held today and tomorrow; but there has been very little interest shown in the event thus far. Only eight players have entered. If there are 16 entrants the championship will be held.

Practically all of the local clubs have scheduled special matches and tourneys for Independence day. A number of the Golf Committees have provided for driving and putting contests.

5 MUNICIPAL LEAGUE PLAYERS SUSPENDED

Five new suspensions were handed down during the past week by the officials of the Municipal Baseball Association. E. Walsh of the Stag A. C. was set down indefinitely; Tommy Thompson, Hezels; Ed Shenkel, Stag A. C., and Clarence Fox, Stag A. C., one week, and Gus Singler, Hezels, two weeks.

Those still suspended are J. McLaughlin, E. Coshow, N. C. Bates, and G. Froehly. M. Botts of the Wagners has been reinstated. Members of the Stag A. C. are warned that a repetition of last Sunday's action will bring about the suspension of the entire club.

SHOCKER AND SOTHORON LEAD BROWNIE PITCHERS

Urban Shocker and Allan Sotheron, righthanders, are the pitching leaders for Jimmy Burke's Browns. Both have gained six victories and have been beaten four times. Shocker has permitted 22 runs and Sothoron 26. The other records are Gallia, 6—5; Koob, 1—1; Wellman, 3—5, and Davenport, 2—6. Davenport has pitched only 51 innings and in that time has been scored upon 33 times, an average of 5.67 runs per game.

60,000 of 80,000 Cuckoos, Expected at Toledo "Row," Should Ought to Be Hungry

Lardner, Glutton for Statistics, Figures This Will Be an Outlay of 40,000 Rolls and 3000 Loaves of Bread — Promoters Saved Room Rent Naming Pecord Referee.

By Ring W. Lardner.

TOLEDO O., June 28.—Gents: As you know gents, I am a glutton for statistics and I got another earful of them today. In the first place I come down in the elevator and was trying to bust through the lobby and look in my mail box and see if there was any complaints and a bird stopped me and said his name was H. M. Broad and he had the sandwich privilege or concession or whatever you call it and of course I said what of it and he said he thought I was wildly excited about statistics. So I said go ahead and shoot your statistics.

"Well, gents, here are the statistics: It seems there is going to be about 80,000 cuckoos, bugs, etc., out to the big disagreement next Friday, and Mr. Broad, who is very broadminded, thinks that 60,000 of them besides being blood thirsty, will be hungry for sandwiches. So he is going to make up, or has made up, 40,000 redhots and 20,000 cheese sandwiches, which he says involves an outside lining of 40,000 rolls and 3000 loaves of bread. So when he got through talking I said what are they among so many because that's just a lunch for Willard himself, but he said Willard would not be solicited, and further and more would not be allowed to purchase.

Enough for the Sandwiches.

So much for the sandwiches. But speaking of Broad, Mr. Rickard, whose real interest name is George Lewis and not Tex, told me today that the engineer who was building the arena, had told him that a space of 2 feet was to be allowed for each newspaper bird, and if the said newspaper bird demanded a telegraph operator along the side of him, why, that had to be included in the two feet.

Well, I thought that was all O K till I happened to think of Bob Maxwell and Irving R. Cobb and Sam Hall being here, and now I am kind of wondering if we will all be crowded or if the birds I have mentioned will be offset by people like I and Damon Runyan and Grantland Rice, that if you set us all along the side of each other on the top of a bayonet, we could still nudge one another in the ribs.

I found out today for the first time why Ollie Pecord was chosen for referee. You see if they got a referee from out-of-town, that would mean they would have to find some place for him outside of the ring itself and the hotels will be pretty well crowded, but Pecord lives right here in the town and you don't have to get him a room. So, all together, it's the best choice that could of been made because now all the outsiders that thought they was going to referee left town and there is plenty of room in the hotels for the cash customers.

Glad Dempsey Is the Bird.

The cuckoo club was added to yesterday by the arrival of Mr. W. A. La Mountain. Mr. La Mountain came all the way from Manila, P. I., to see this holocaust and that makes the rest of us look like as if we had good sense.

As for the big brawl itself, the preponderance of experts still seems to think that the big fellow is in no shape to put up a battle, but some of these experts is the same that said Jeffries was in the pink of condition before Johnson knocked him for a goal in Reno, and afterwards the experts said they knew all along that Jeff was senile and all in, etc., before he ever went into the ring. So now, when they tell me that the big fellow isn't fit I kind of turn a deaf ear and all as I can say is that I am glad Dempsey is the bird that has to lick him, not me.

Whitney Finishes 12 Up in Final of Southern Tourney

Trans - Mississippi Champion Wins Golf Title of South for Fifth Time.

NEW ORLEANS, June 28.—Nelson Whitney of New Orleans won the Southern Golf Association championship today, defeating Louis Jacoby of Dallas, 12 up and 11 to play. The match ended on the twenty-fifth hole.

Whitney, who played top-notch golf through all of his contests, brought the tournament to a close by sinking a 10-foot putt on the twenty-fifth green. He led Jacoby all the way, finishing the morning round 9 up.

The victory makes him holder of two golf titles, the Southern championship going to him for the fifth time, while he was winner in the Trans-Mississippi tournament at St. Louis early this month.

Eller and Causey Tied.

Langford and Wills Sign Contracts for July 4 Contest Here

TOMMY SULLIVAN, matchmaker for the Future City Athletic Club, announced last night that the signed contracts of Sam Langford and Harry Wills, in which they agree to fight here July 4 at Sportsman's Park, in the afternoon, had been received by the club officials. The men will battle eight rounds at catch weights. They have fought several times, each having knocked out the other. Wills is considered today the most dangerous heavyweight in the country.

Returns from the world's championship contest will be read from ringside.

Besides the main event, two preliminaries will be arranged. An endeavor is being made to match Charley Stapp and Eddie Spear in one of them. Spear recently knocked out Fred Nelson. Stapp will be required to weigh 145 pounds if he accepts the match.

Walker Captures Title.

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—A. L. Walker of Columbia won the intercollegiate golf championship by defeating J. S. Dean of Princeton in the final round at the Marion Cricket Club today, 4 up and 2 to play. Dean was three up on Walker at the end of the first 18 holes of the 36-hole match. The Columbia player came back strong in the second half, squared the match at the tenth hole, took the lead on the eleventh, and was never headed after that.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The championship event on today's final card of the three-day tenth annual horse show at the South Shore Country Club was won by "The Whip" with "Lady Delman" second, both owned by Miss Constance Vauclain of Rosemont, Pa. Her stable easily won more honors than that of any other exhibitor. She won seven firsts the opening day, as many yesterday and four today.

Miss May Hall was thrown from her mount in a hunters and jumpers event today, but was not seriously injured. The accident was the second of the kind during the show.

Jack Dempsey Will Quit Heavy Training Monday

Challenger Says That Just a Little More Boxing Is Necessary to Put Him on Edge.

By Jack Dempsey,

(Copyright, 1919, by the Evening Mail Syndicate.)

TOLEDO, June 28.—I made a decision today to bring my heavy training to an end Monday. I will do no boxing on that day, under my present plans, and unless a last-minute change is made my appearance before the public will be most perfunctory. I have reached the point where I believe the final conditioning has come. Just a little more boxing and I will be on edge.

My drying out stunts will be left behind. I will spend only a few hours getting the liquid out of my system for I perspire very easily. I will drink scarcely any water on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, just enough to keep me from suffering thirst. Friday will find me taut and strong.

There's a lot of satisfaction in going into this test. I feel the call of the struggle. I want to fight and I prefer to fight Jess Willard. I am young and ambitious. I want to make my name famous and I also want to make money at my business. Therefore, I want to be champion.

I will do my very best when I step into Tex Rickard's arena Friday afternoon. I am trained to the limit of possibility. I am ready for a great fight and I intend to produce it. If I don't win it will be no fault of Jack Kearns. They have given me everything they can. If I lose it will be because Jess Willard is the better man.

And, if I win that championship, you may lay a bet that there will be no inaction hereafter. Every worthy man will get his opportunity to whip me. I will be a fighting champion. I give you my word for it.

Clarence Wolff Low Amateur in Tri-City Tourney

St. Louisan Scores 162 for First 36 Holes of Tournament at Kansas City.

M'DONALD LEADS "PROS"

Jim Barnes of Sunset Hill, With 148, Is Just One Stroke Behind Chicagoan.

KANSAS CITY, June 28—Bob McDonald, golf professional of the new Evanston Club of Chicago, led the field in the first day's play in the Tri-City tournament at the Meadow Lake Country Club yesterday. McDonald's score for the 36 holes was 147 strokes, one stroke less than that turned in by Jim Barnes of Sunset Hill Club of St. Louis, who showed a 148 for the double round.

The other low scores, in their order, follow:

John Hutchinson, Glen View Club, Chicago, 155.

Ernest Ford, Meadow Lake, 147.

Joe Matthews, Country Club, and Ray Ouimet, Hill Crest, Kansas City, 158.

Lloyd Gullickson, North Shore, Chicago, Willie Kidd, Algonquin, St. Louis, and William Mehlhorn, Oak Park, Chicago, 159.

Par for 36 holes is 144.

McDonald played interesting golf all the way. He made the morning round in 71, one under par, but took a 76 for the afternoon round, letting down a bit from his excellent golf in the last nine holes, when he took a 41 compared with his 36 over the same stretch in the morning circuit.

Jim Barnes with a 74 was three strokes over McDonald at the end of the first round, but picked up two of them in the afternoon play. The competition between them today should be interesting. Both players are hitting long drives, showing excellent form with mid iron and mashie, and putting well.

Clarence Wolff of the Algonquin Club, St. Louis, was the best of the amateurs, with 162.

James Ward, Kansas City youth, and Missouri State champion, took an 86 for the afternoon round, after making an 80 in the morning, and was second low amateur with a card of 166.

The men with the four low scores at the end of the 54th hole will be paired in a foursome for the last 18 holes this afternoon.

WESTERN TENNIS STARS PREPARE FOR NATIONAL TITLE TOURNAMENT

BERKELEY, Cal., June 28.—Players of national reputation who are likely to be seen in action at Forest Hills, N. Y., when the national tennis championships are played this summer, appeared in the lists of the Pacific Coast Tennis championships which began here June 21 on the courts of the California Lawn Tennis Association and which will continue through June 29.

Among the men who are entered are William Johnston, former National singles champion, who is working hard to get into shape for the National event where he hopes to retrieve his lost laurels; Roland Roberts, present California singles champion; John Strachan, former national clay court, California and Pacific Northwest singles champion; Axel Gravem and Clyde Curley. Among the women entrants are Miss Helen Baker and Anita Myers, respectively State mixed doubles and ladies' singles champions.

The entry list assures the best competition which has been seen on the Pacific Coast since the United States entered the great war. Many of the players have just returned from abroad where they have seen active service with the colors in one capacity or another.

A unique feature of these championships is the fact that special provision has been made for those engaged in business to play matches after business hours in the afternoon. These matches will begin at 6 o'clock. With the daylight saving law in force there will be ample time left to play the requisite number of sets before sundown. Entrants were requested to advise whether they were "commercially engaged" in order to make up the schedule of play to conform to the requirements.

The events to be decided are: Men's singles, women's singles, men's doubles, women's doubles, junior singles, junior doubles, girls' junior singles and mixed doubles.

Officials of the tournament have announced that the foot fault rule will be strictly enforced. There has been some criticism in the past that this rule has been overlooked by referees.

Who's Loony Now?

OH, the world is topsy-turvy,
everybody is insane;
There's a wave of prohibition caused by water on the brain
I do not care for coffee, but I'm very fond of tea,
So all the population should take pattern after me.

CHORUS.
Everybody's crazy but me!
Everybody's crazy but me!
Everybody in the nation
Has some mental aberration,
For everybody's crazy but me!

OH, everybody's loony and the world is out of gear,
Some cry for aqua pura, while the balance yell for beer;
I do not care for either, but I'll take the grape in mine,
Which makes it quite apparent we should all be drinking wine.

CHORUS.
Everybody's crazy but me!
Everybody's crazy but me!
Everybody in the nation
Has some pet hallucination,
For everybody's crazy but me!

SOME people like tobacco and they want to make it known
That if they so desire they've a right to "roll their own."
Some like a clear Havana, but I smoke a pipe of clay,
Which makes it quite apparent
that's the only proper way.

CHORUS.
Everybody's crazy but me!
Everybody's crazy but me!
There is something in their attic
Makes them more or less erratic,
For everybody's crazy but me!

Central States Mixed Doubles to Start Tomorrow

Play in Men's Singles and Doubles Will Commence July 5 at Triple A.

CHAMPION NOT COMING

S. Howard Voshell, 1918 Winner Will Participate in East vs. West Competition.

By Davison Obear,
Secretary St. Louis Tennis Association.

The 12th annual Central States tennis championship in singles and doubles will be held at the Triple A Club during the week commencing Saturday, July 5. The tournament is usually the only major one for men awarded to the city. It is officially sanctioned and will be conducted under the auspices of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association and the Triple A Club.

Play in the mixed doubles will start tomorrow. Miss Corinne Gould, State and Central States champion, is paired with Ted Drewes of St. Louis, present Missouri champion. Fred Josties, a St. Louis player, is paired with Miss L. Hammann of Kansas City. Other pairings to date are: Miss N. Arnstein and A. Schwartz; Mrs. George Irish and Joseph Hercules; Virginia Gordon and Sam Gordon; Miss M. Finnigan and Robert Woods; Mrs. H. S. Adams, Centralia, Ill., and Elmer Schwartz; Mrs. L. Hagemeyer and Wayman Williams; Miss Margaret Haase and Walter Haase, Dr. and Mrs. Lee Canouse.

Central States History.

In 1908 Ollie V. Vernon of St. Joseph, Mo., won the first Central States singles title and C. Drummond Jones paired with Paul Gleeson won the doubles. In the 11 tournaments held since 1908 only four visiting players have captured the singles titles. Following the victory of Vernon in 1908 Jack Cannon of Kansas City won the event in 191. He defeated Rollie Hoerr in the finals. This was a decided upset as Hoerr won the first two sets and was leading at 5—0 in the third set when Cannon braced and took the set, the next two and the title.

Ichiya Kumagae, the Japanese player, made his appearance in St. Louis in 1916 and took the singles and last year S. Howard Voshell, former National indoor champion, won the title. Drummond Jones, paired with Paul Gleeson and later with C. S. Peters of Chicago and Rollie Hoerr figured in every doubles championship from 1908 to 1915 inclusive. Kumagae and Mikami, his Japanese partner, are the only two visiting players to win the doubles title.

The Tennis Committee of the Triple A Club, consisting of Clifford H. Albers, Chairman Roland M. Hoerr and Dempster Godlove, has announced that prizes will be awarded the winners and runnersup in each event and the winner of the consolations. The Triple A trophies will go to the winners of each event for one year and when won three times—not necessarily in succession—will become their personal property.

Enemy Aliens Ineligible.

In compliance with a recent ruling of the U. S. National Lawn Tennis Association the committee has announced that no enemy alien players are eligible to compete.

A number of the prominent players in this section who expect to enter the National Clay Court tournament at Chicago July 14 are urged to enter the Central States event as the means of securing a week's good practice prior to play at Chicago.

Vosell, the present singles title holder, is not expected to enter as he is a member of the Eastern team which will play in the East vs. West matches at Cincinnati July 10 to 12. Drewes and Josties will defend their title in the doubles. The entries will close July 3 and may be made through M. J. Halloran, 317 Security Building, or Robert Ross, Triple A Club.

Thormahlen Is Leader.

Herbert Thormahlen, Miller Huggins' star young southpaw, is the leading pitcher in the A. L. The lefthander of the Yankees has won seven games and lost only one. He has hurled 86 innings and has permitted only 16 tallies.

THIRD REGIMENT HOME GUARDS MUSTERED OUT

Unit Holds Last Review and Is Demobilized With Ceremonies at Forest Park.

Forest Park in the vicinity of the Jefferson Memorial had all the aspects of a military camp yesterday afternoon when the 1200 men and officers of the Third Regiment of the Missouri Home Guard gathered for their last review and demobilization.

The men gathered at the De Balliviere entrance to Forest Park at 3:30 o'clock and were in ranks with their respective units, ready to parade, when the Adjutant's call was blown at 4 o'clock.

From the Jefferson Memorial the regiment marched over Washington Drive to the Parade Grounds, the north and south sides of which were lined with enthusiastic spectators, mostly relatives of the guardsmen, who applauded each company as it passed. After the regiment had executed several maneuvers under the command of Col. Dyer, retreat was blown and the Parade Ground flag was lowered to the strains of the "Star-Spangled Banner."

Companies Pass in Review.

The 12 companies of infantry, preceded by the regimental band, the Machine Gun and Sanitary Companies, then passed in review before the reviewing committee, which consisted of Col. Dyer, Mayor Kiel, staff officers of the Third Regiment, Maj. Donnelly, Maj. Comfort and other returned officers. Guns, the Russian rifles which the regiment has drilled with for the last six months, were carried without bayonets, and the blouses were worn tightly buttoned. The companies swung by in platoon formation, accompanied throughout by the martial strains of the band.

When the review was finished the regiment marched to the Jefferson Memorial, where the national and regimental colors were presented to the Missouri Historical Society. John H. Gundlach, who, with Charles P. Pettus, secretary-treasurer of the society, received the colors, in reply to Col. Dyer's presentation speech, said that the colors would be a reminder to the future generations of a splendid and worthy service in behalf of democracy, one of the services, he said, that had made victory possible.

Col. Dyer Addresses Men.

Col. Dyer then addressed the regiment and thanked the men for their continual co-operation and good spirit. He read resolutions of thanks from the Chamber of Commerce and Gov. Gardner, and as his parting words urged each man individually to do his utmost in safeguarding the victory won on the other side. At the conclusion of his remarks, Lieutenant-Colonel Sinclair presented Col. Dyer a monogrammed cigarette case on behalf of the officers of the regiment. Demobilization orders from Gov. Gardner were then read by Capt. Metcalfe, Adjutant of the Third Regiment, and the companies were dismissed for the last time. Honorable discharges will be mailed to the men during the coming week, and they will be permitted to keep all personal equipment.

The Third Regiment was organized Aug. 24, 1917, following the formation of the First Regiment, and soon after the departure of the National Guard units. It has a personnel of about 1200 men and 54 officers. Of the 12 infantry companies, five were recruited from the county, one each from University City, Clayton, Kirkwood, Maplewood and Richmond Heights. Members of the regiment participated in the Red Cross, Liberty Loan and similar war drives and did police duty in the Court of Honor on Twelfth street during the festivities that marked the return of St. Louis units from overseas duty. The First Regiment was mustered out June 14.

The Home Guard Committee offered to present a medal to each of the guardsmen, but the regiment unanimously requested the committee to give the money to the Salvation Army instead.

REEVES WITH AUTO CLUB

Former Newspaper Man Succeeds McKibbin as Secretary.

Ernest Reeves, a former St. Louis newspaper man, and more recently a teacher at the Central High School, has been elected secretary of the Automobile Club of St. Louis, to succeed A. C. McKibbin, whose resignation took effect June 1. Reeves will enter upon his duties tomorrow morning.

The club plans to resume the Annual Reliability Tour, which was dropped when the country went to war. This year's run will be in the second week in October, to Arcadia, Ste. Genevieve and Cape Girardeau. Trophies will be awarded for the best scores made in each of three classes. In previous years there have been but two classifications. Two days will be the duration. Samuel Plant, chairman of the Tours Committee, is in charge of the arrangements.

FOLK AID IN BOODLE CASES RETAINED IN U. R. INQUIRY

Andrew C. Maroney to Assist Circuit Attorney McDaniel in Investigation.

Andrew C. Maroney, a former Assistant Circuit Attorney, was retained by Circuit Attorney McDaniel yesterday to aid him in the investigation of alleged corruption in connection with United Railways franchises and of the theft of referendum petitions. Maroney was the chief aid of Joseph W. Folk in the famous boodle prosecutions of members of the Municipal Assembly who accepted bribes to pass the Central Traction and Lighting bills. The salary which he will receive has not been made public.

The Circuit Attorney today said he was not inclined to accept Mayor Kiel's offer to advance money to him out of the Mayor's contingent fund for use in the investigation. He said he preferred to await the passage of a bill introduced yesterday in the Board of Aldermen to appropriate $10,000.

The earliest session of the board at which the bill may be passed will be July 18. The Circuit Attorney said there was no pressing need of the money until then. The board yesterday passed a resolution pledging itself to pass the appropriation bill.

SOFT DRINK BOTTLERS STRIKE

More Than 100 of 150 Who Walked Out Return Later.

About 150 members of the Soft Drink and Mineral Water Workers' Union, employed at 60 soft drink manufacturing plants in the city, struck yesterday morning when their demand for an increase of 50 cents a day was refused. More than 100 of them returned to work late in the afternoon when all but 19 factory managers agreed to grant the increase. Bottlers were paid $4.50 a day and bottle washers $3.50.

NATIONAL BANK 1st IN ST. LOUIS

Ready for Peace and the New Day

The consolidation of the St. Louis Union Bank, Mechanics - American National Bank and Third National Bank as the First National Bank in St. Louis was conceived in order to give St. Louis a financial institution which can do its full share during the Readjustment Period.

As an odd coincidence, the signing of the Peace Treaty comes just as the remodeling of the quarters of the new bank is nearing completion, in readiness for the opening of the First National Bank on July 7.

The accompanying ground floor plan shows just how competely the new bank will be prepared to accommodate its many patrons.

In addition to the space shown, 23,000 sq. ft. of floor space have been provided to accommodate the force of 600 clerks.

7-STORY HOME FOR FUR ASSOCIATION ON FOURTH STREET

Laclede Investment Company Buys Site at Corner of Market Street and Will Erect Building.

COST NOT LESS THAN $1,000,000

Sale of Southern Hotel to Interests of Financial Strength Said to Be an Early Probability.

By Berry Moore.

Negotiations were conducted yesterday whereby the Laclede Investment Co., of which Nelson R. Darragh, is president, will erect a seven-story fire-proof building at the southeast corner of Fourth and Market streets for the Fur Dealers' Association. The announcement was made yesterday by W. A. Giraldin of Giraldin Bros., who promoted the sale of the site to the Laclede Company.

The lot has a frontage on Fourth street of 207 feet by a depth of 150 feet. The corner lot 100x150 feet was acquired from the Board of Education, and the adjoining 107x150 from John M. Causland. The prices paid for the two plots were not made public.

The project contemplates not only a home for the Fur Dealers' Association, of which Phillip P. Fouke, president of Funston Bros. & Co., a branch of the International Fur Exchange, is president, but quarters for the members of the organization.

Handsome Building Planned.

Plans for the building which will be on a handsome scale are being drawn. The probable cost of the structure was not suggested by Giraldin, but in view of the wide dimensions of the site and the high cost of construction it could hardly be built for less than $1,000,000.

With the advent of this enterprise the prestige of St. Louis as a fur center will be acentuated, while this section of the city will receive new life, it is believed.

As a result of the successful erection of thisprospect, the Southern Hotel on the verge of being sold to interests which have ample resources for its conversion.

Theater Is Projected.

Negotiations, it is understood, are progressing for a site at the northeast corner of Eighth street and Washington avenue for a theater to be built by the Loew-Garrick Theater Co. The ground embraced in this deal includes 45x90 feet on the corner, owned by the W. Thompson Investment Co., 45x90 feet by G. B. Aller, and 45x90 feet by the Regent Investment Co., of which J. T. Conrad is president.

The plans contemplate the vacation of a 20-foot alley in the rear of the lots.

Cornet & Zeibig have practically concluded negotiations for the sale of a downtown corner. The building is now vacant.

The Mechanics-American National Bank has leased a three-story building at 307 North Broadway for the enlargement of its quarters at the southwest corner of Broadway and Locust street, which is to be the temporary home of the recently organized First National Bank. The Oreon E. & R. G. Scott Real Estate Co. effected the lease, in connection with the Martin-Breitt Real Estate Co. The Standard Catering Co. was the lessee.

GOLLUBER MILLINERY CO.

NEGOTIATIONS have been concluded through the Martin-Breitt Realty Co., representing both parties, for the erection of a five-story and basement building at 1409-11 Washington avenue. A two-story building now occupies the site of 54x134 feet.

The structure will be of reinforced concrete and will be equipped with a steam-heating plant and sprinkler system, freight and passenger elevators inclosed in fire-proof shafts. The floors will be of concrete with water-proof finish. It will be what is known as flat slab construction.

The first, second and third floors will be finished and arranged for sample rooms, sales rooms and offices. The fourth and fifth floors will be for manufacturing purposes.

SPACE IN KENNETT BUILDING LEASED BY KESSLER FUR CO.

The Fletcher R. Harris Realty Co. has leased to the Alex. F. Kessler Fur and Hat Co. 509 Locust street, a part of the ground floor of the Kennett Building, on which extensive alterations are being made. G. H. Walker & Co. will occupy the larger part of this floor at the northwest corner of Locust street and Broadway. It is said another bonding concern will occupy the store next west, and the leasing of the store to the Kessler company will take up all the space on the ground floor. An elaborate front will be put in the Kessler store, together with a mezzanine floor. The Harris company also leased to the Kessler company the northwest wing of the fourth floor of the same building, which will be used in connection with its fur department.

The unexpired term of the lease of the Kessler company at 511 Olive street was sold by the Harris Realty Co. to the new First National Bank.

The Harris company also leased to the Oxford Hotel all the upper floors of 704-6 Pine street.

MOST TENANTS CONTENT WITH HIGHER RENT, SAYS DICKMANN

Joseph F. Dickmann, president of the Dickmann Real Estate Co., says that in many instances where rents are increased the tenants are content to remain in the property, being familiar with the fact of higher costs of maintaining property along every line. Many tenants, he states, have purchased their own homes.

Dickmann has been a staunch believer in St. Louis real estate as a solid investment. At no time, he says, has the demand for homes and flats been more active at both of his offices. Dickmann believes that 1919 will be a record-breaker for the buying of homes and flats.

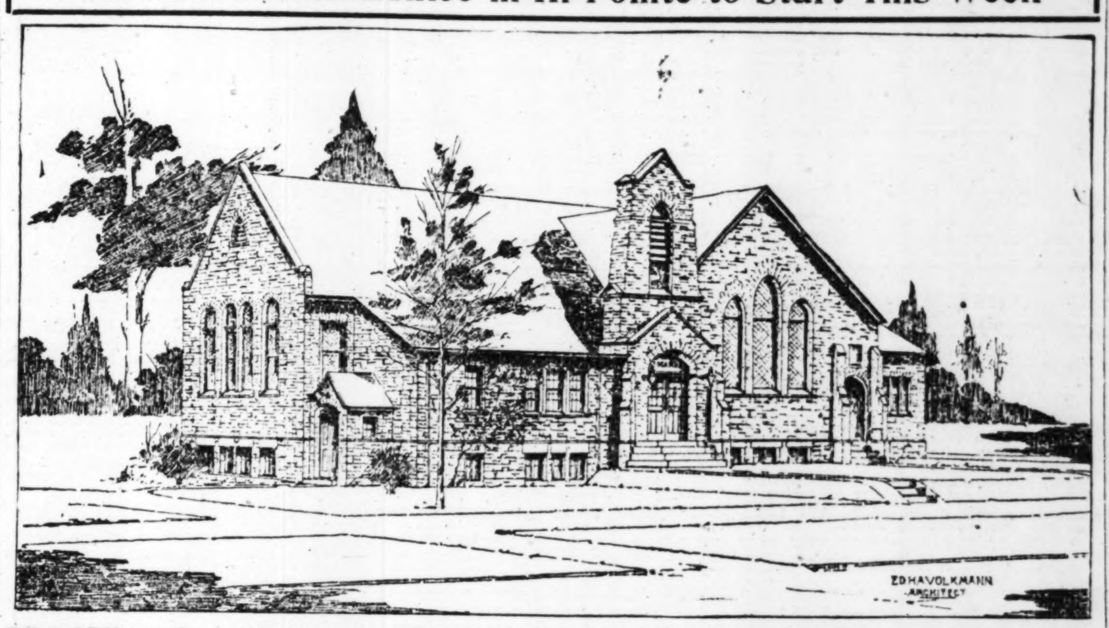
Work on Church Edifice in Hi-Pointe to Start This Week



ED H A VOLKMANN ARCHITECT

WORK is to begin this week on the new home of the St. Mark's English Evangelical Lutheran congregation, on the site bought last fall from the Broadway Savings Trust Co., and ideally located on an eminence on Clayton road, immediately west of Forest Park and overlooking the beautiful Hi-Pointe residence subdivision.

Since the sale of its former church property at Cardinal and Bell avenues, St. Mark's has been conducting its services at the Adventist Church, Newstead and Delmar avenues, where its Sunday morning services will be continued until the new edifice is completed. It also conducts a Sunday School at Forest and Clayton avenues, just east of its new location in Hi-Pointe, where its Sunday evening services are also held. The Rev. Dr. W. E. Wheeler is pastor.

The new structure, to cost $55,000, will be entirely of stone, emulating the earlier designs of the reposeful parish churches of England. The building will occupy a site fronting 120 feet on Clayton road, at the intersection of a public cross walk leading to the Market street car line to the south and the Hamilton car line to the west. While complete for the congregation's present needs, it is being built to make future extensions possible without encroaching upon present arrangements and still conserve the beauty of surrounding lawns.

The plans embody many practical and essential features of a modern church. The seating capacity of its main auditorium can be readily increased from 300 to 600 for overflow attendance without distraction to the worshipers. Advanced classes can be conducted separately on the first floor. A large reception room, choir room and pastor's office are also provided.

The slope in the lot grade at the rear of the building makes a well-lighted and ventilated basement arrangement possible, where a large Sunday School auditorium and connecting class rooms are provided for, as also reading rooms, dining hall, and a well arranged kitchen, special regard being given to facilities for entertainments to be given young people of the church.

Preparations are in the making for speedy construction of the building. Ed H. A. Volkmann is the architect, and as the directing head of the Victor Corporation, will have charge of the construction work. This company has contracts in this and adjacent subdivisions totaling more than $100,000.

Werner has been assistant manager of the company at New York City for several years, and Hilton has been assistant manager at Chicago, both having had wide experience in the handling of men's clothing.

This store will be an exclusive agency for the sale of Hilton company clothes direct to the consumer. Extensive improvements are to be made and modern fixtures installed. The property is owned by the Lindell Real Estate Co.

This lease, together with that made last week by the Martin-Breitt Co. to the Stix, Baer & Fuller Dry Goods Co., for the eight-story building at the northwest corner of Seventh street and Washington avenue, owned by the Shoenberg Real Estate & Investment Co., means a great deal to stabilizing of property values on Washington avenue.

The Martin-Breitt Company also announce leases on the five-story building at the southeast corner of 12th and Walnut streets, to Baer, Sternberg & Cohen, to be used for the manufacture and storage of ladies' millinery. About 90 days ago Martin-Breitt leased this company 30,000 square feet of floor space at the southwest corner of 14th and Locust streets. Franciscus and Kuns represented the owners.

RIVERVIEW GARDENS BUILDING BOOM REPORTED UNDER WAY

A building boom has started in Riverview Gardens, according to Sikking & Beckwith, agents for that popular subdivision.

Edgar J. Schuchardt last week began the erection of a $3000 bungalow on the corner of Circle and Northgate drives, and Arthur Rheinnecker finished the framework of his $3500 home on Diamond drive. Plans were accepted by Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Radmore for a $6000 bungalow to be built at once on their lots on Lookout drive. Plans for several other homes are being drawn, while at least 10 smaller houses are under construction in the Little Farm section.

Sales continued good and averaged well for the week. The agents say that out of the original tract of 255 acres they have only 61 lots unsold. Of these, 17 are little farm tracts, selling from $3 to $5 per foot, and 44 are bungalow sites, nearly all with a beautiful view over the river, and selling from $5 to $10 per foot, all on terms of $25 cash and payments of $5 to $10 per month, without interest or taxes for one year.

Riverview Gardens is located in North St. Louis, midway between Baden and the Chain of Rocks, and fronts on Riverview drive. Sales in this addition now aggregate more than $230,000.

THIS WEEK TO MARK END OF FINAL HI-POINTE LOTS SALE

Notable demand for building sites resulted in the third week of the closing sale of Hi-Pointe being the most successful since the inauguration of the 30-day sompaign, and it is expected that the current week, which is the final one, will be marked by a clean sweep of every available site in the subdivision.

The Broadway Savings Trust Co., agent, has announced a substanial advance in the price of all unsold lots at the close of the sale, and shrewdw investors are taking advantage of the opportunity to purchase sites which will net them an early and substantial profit. Several recent purchasers of lots have already resold their lots at a profit of $10 or more per front foot, and have reinvested in another lot.

CAMPBELL AUTO SUPPLY CO. LEASES LOCUST STREET BUILDING

Cornett & Zelbig have leased 2806-12 Locust street to the Campbell Auto Supply Co., now located at 1109 Locust street, but will remove to the new home about Oct. 1. Teh new quarters contain about four times the amount of floor space now occupied. The lease was for the Beaumont Real Estate and Mercantile Co.

The McQuay-Morris Manufacturing Co., makers of packing rings for automobiles, present occupants of the premises, are, on account of increasing business, building a large factory at Cooper and Bishop avenues, on the Oak Hill Railroad.

George H. Steiff of the Mercantile Trust Co. represented the Campbell company, and Earnest Edwards represented Cornet & eZibig.

Home Designed by Guy Study, Architect for Maryland Terrace.

An Extraordinary Situation

The ONLY deep lot property left in St. Louis today is Restricted Maryland Terrace

Adjoining Washington University Campus

And your only protection against congestion, remember, is deep lots, facing wide drives, where deep building lines hold the houses well back from the street.

Don't build or buy a home where the lots are short. Good grounds only will protect your home against crowding. Even a modest home with grounds is more livable, more salable, looks better and is more attractive than an expensive home set within a few feet of a crowded street.

Build or let us build for you in Maryland Terrace, the modern, restricted and thoroughly improved 100-acre Residence Park.

Every lot is 190 to 219 feet deep. Here there can never be any crowding or congestion. When you plant your trees and shrubbery you can carve your name on them, knowing that as long as you make St. Louis your home you will be happy here. Each season your grounds become more attractive as nature grows your trees, shrubs and flowers.

It's grounds with shrubs, flowers, possibly a pergola, bird bath, that lend charm and attractiveness to the home. And you must have deep lots—don't ever for one moment think otherwise—to protect that home, to keep you from becoming tired of it. That's why Maryland Terrace is today attracting so many families.

Visit Maryland Terrace in Cool of the Evening

When it's pleasant, and the day's work is done, bring the family, drive to Maryland Terrace.

See this really beautiful park. See the homes, each surrounded with ample grounds; the deep lots, the well-trimmed lawns. See the many beautiful homes—how each differ from the other—no two alike. What wonderful stucco and brick residences!

See what you can actually get in a home for $11,000, $12,000, $15,000 or $20,000. Learn how you can pay for it with a reasonable cash payment and the balance like rent, paying for it during your PRODUCING YEARS.

Know the advantage of NOW getting the home question solved before the few remaining lots are taken and prices advance 30% to 100%.

We will build for you as we are building for your friends—relieving you of all detail. A good architect designs the home, because perfect harmony of design only will make that home grow as you grow, suiting you better all the time.

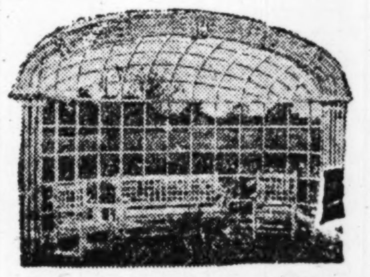
If you make $400 a month, if you pay $80 a month rent, you can own your own home here—have an asset instead of rent receipts—be settled instead of having the family subject to some landlord. You don't think much of the fellow always changing his business, do you?

Business Men Buying and Gradually Paying for Home Sites on Which They Will Build Later.

If you are not ready to build at this time, select your home site in Maryland Terrace, start paying for it, and then when paid for build, or let us build for you.

This property is becoming very scarce, more so than you can possibly realize, unless you have been watching the market the last few months.

See Everett Davis, President of the Company, living at the northeast corner of Williams and Westmoreland drives, in Maryland Terrace, for full particulars Come in the evening, when the Bob Whites are calling. Make yourself at home in this park, visit with us.



See the different new plans we have for artistic homes. Find out what the ground is worth. Then, having facts, you can the better decide what you want to do.

Maryland Terrace extends west from Pennsylvania avenue, the west boundary of the campus, on both Maryland and Westmoreland drives, with the University car direct.

Eight New Homes

Eight new homes are now under construction in Ames Place. They will range in price from $12,000 to $20,000.

Ames Place is selling fast, and building up just as quickly. You can buy at $52.50 a foot if you decide now.

Look all over St. Louis and see for yourself—then look at

You will find our representative in the office at Pershing and Pennsylvania Avenues, who will give you full information in regard to lots for sale, restrictions and price per foot.

FORMER KAISER THINKS HOLLAND CANNOT LEGALLY GIVE HIM UP

Believes, With Advisers, That International Law Forbids His Surrender to Entente.

By the Associated Press.

AMERONGEN, Wednesday, June 25.—Former Emperor William and his advisers are apparently fully confident The Netherlands Government will be unable to consent to the Entente's forthcoming demand for his extradition, which the former Emperor's suite regards as illegal under existing international law. Several members of the entourage are away from Amerongen, being busily engaged in inspecting houses with a view to the purchase of Count Hohenzollern's future residence, and indications point to his removal within a short period from his present place of exile.

The former monarch was himself outwardly calm today after the first shock of hearing that Germany had decided to sign the treaty without reservations. His wife, however, was more affected and appeared to be deeply saddened by the prospect that it will be impossible for her ever to return to Germany. She remained within the castle when her husband went, with Dr. Forester, to resume his morning log sawing and was not seen about the garden during the afternoon.

As far as can be learned, the choice of a future home for Count Hohenzollern lies betwen two castles, one in the vicinity of Doorn and the other near Arnhem.

Chamber of Commerce Enrolling Laborers for Wheat Fields.

The Productions Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce is preparing to send men to the wheat fields of Missouri, the need of which is expected to become urgent within the next ten days, according to Carl J. Baer, manager of the Bureau.

The registration bureau for the enrollment of all men who are seeking harvest work is open daily at the Chamber of Commerce. The men must have sufficient funds to carry them to the fields, as no transportation is being advanced.

In loving memory of our dear son and brother, Francis Hawkins, who departed this life July 3, 1917:

A precious one from us has gone.
A voice we loved is stilled.
A place is vacant in our home
Which never can be filled.
And while he lies in peaceful sleep
His memory we shall always keep.

FATHER, MOTHER AND BROTHER.

Lena Schlueter, June 28, 1919. In loving memory of our dead mother and grandmother who departed this life June 28, 1918, just one year ago you left us, how we miss you, mother dear, and remember all your kindness as we drop a silent tear. Sad and sudden was the call for our dear mother who was loved by all. We little thought that on that day our darling mother would be called away. She shall never be forgotten. Never from our memory fade, loving hearts will always linger around the grave where she is laid. Sadly missed by Carl, brother and sister.

In loving memory of our dear brother, Everett Thomas, who passed away June 28, 1918:

Just one year ago today
Since our dear brother passed away.
O Lord, keep green the grave that lies
Beneath the winter starry skies.
Keep sweet with sleep and give him rest.
A loving son and brother, true and kind,
No friend like him on earth we'll find.
God called him—it was His will—
But in our hearts he lingers still.
For all of us he did his best.
May God grant him eternal rest.

Sadly missed by
MOTHER, FATHER AND SISTERS.

In loving memory of my dear husband and father, Robert Pallett, who departed this life one year ago, June 26, 1918.

One year has passed away;
Sad and sudden was the call
For my husband—loved by all,
Loving father, true and kind,
No friend on earth like him we'll find.
I little thought that on that day
That my dear husband was called away,
I could not realize what was said
When the message came that he was dead.
God called him home—it was His will—
But in our hearts he lingers still.
For all of us he did his best.
Day by day I sadly miss him,
Friends may think the wound is healed,
But they little know the grief
That within my heart is concealed.
He shall never be forgotten—
Never from my memory fade;
Loving hearts will always linger
Round the grave where he is laid.

Sadly missed by
WIFE AND CHILDREN,
SISTER AND BROTHER.

READING CHARACTER.

ENDERBY.—We find these statements, but do not vouch for their accuracy: No person's character should be judged by one characteristic only, for a feature that indicates one good quality may be offset by another denoting a bad trait. The proper way is to estimate each at its own value and combine all of them. In sizing up a person rapidly the things to be considered are the facial angles, eyes, lips and their position, nose, chin and forehead. From a knowledge of the significance of these features one's life story may be seen largely almost at a glance. The most telltale indications of character and those most often observed are the eyes. A great many characteristics may be read in their depths. Very dark brown or black eyes denote an impetuous temperament, one capable of extremes of feeling and passionate, romantic love. The russet brown eye denotes an affectionate disposition; the yellowish brown eye indicates an inconstant, shallow disposition and little will power. The ideal of sublime purity is found in the violet or dark blue eye, but it's well to note that not much intellectuality is expressed by this color. The clear, lighter blue eye denotes a cheerful, constant nature, intellectual power and passion well balanced. Gray eyes denote intellectuality always. The pale blue eye also indicates intellectuality as well as coldness and selfishness. If the blue of the eye has a greenish tint, intellect predominates over the passions and wisdom and moral courage are characteristics of the person. The greenish gray eye is the most intellectual and the eye with varying shades of blue and orange is the eye of genius. A preponderance of green shades in the eyes denotes coquetry and artful deceitfulness. Chin and jaws important. The dead colors and dull expressionless eyes indicate the sluggish temperament, a lifeless disposition and cold, selfish nature. A steadfast glance from brown eyes is an indication of amatory love. Rapid and constantly shifting movements of the eyes indicate the nervous, careful temperament and often suggest the criminal. The distances between the eyes also have their meaning. A great width between the eyes denotes a susceptible intellect, while eyes close together are an indication of obstinacy. Large eyes usually mean a calm, constant nature; deep-set eyes denote a selfish, determined and harsh temperament. The bulging eye indicates culture, refinement and gentility. Next in importance to the eye are the chin and lower jaw. The set of the jaw is a very faithful indication of the character of the man. The action of the muscles in early life may determine the character of the chin. Thus, the man with the firmly set jaw has been accustomed to set his teeth in earlier life and is found to be a man with a great power, a man who will not be found wanting at a critical time. Certain habits often determine the set of the jaw. For instance, no sailor ever has a weak jaw. All crews of fighters, who have been obliged to live on hardtack, that requires much mastication, have acquired a notable firmness of jaw. The habitual gum chewer also can be detected in the same way, the jaw having acquired a greater prominence and firmness through constant use. Tobacco chewing also leaves its mark on the countenance. The long, lank jaw and firm mouth are the signs of the chewer. A curious resemblance may be seen as to shape of face and chin in many of the pictures of early Civil War soldiers, nearly all of them being long of face and sallow, with angular jaws and wrinkled cheeks. The majority of them were tobacco chewers. The modern characteristic seems to be a certain weakness of chin and jaw outline that may be due to the fact that our food is largely prepared for us and requires little mastication. The shape of the chin is of considerable importance in reading character. A chin smooth and round denotes a child-like disposition and a yielding will. The oval chin is an indication of an artistic, sensitive nature, with some talent along those lines, while the angular chin denotes the scientific, practical nature. The protruding chin always means combativeness, determination and power, the receding chin denotes the weak will and the straight chin also denotes weakness. The long chin indicates a gross nature and the short a timid nature. A short chin, accompanied by full, fat cheeks, often is an indication of the singer. The dimpled chin is a sure sign of the artistic temperament, with talent for painting, music or sculpture. It is interesting to note that nearly all great men had dimpled chins. The manner of laughing is a reliable indication of a person's depth of thought and self-control. For instance, the chronic giggler usually is a person of shallow thought, while the quiet person, who seldom laughs and only rarely smiles, has a great intensity of feeling and thoughtfulness. The height of the forehead and shape of the skull indicate brain power. The high forehead usually is well filled with "gray matter," while the low, retreating forehead often indicates the low, animal nature. A person's disposition may be read in the wrinkles in the face. Certain little lines at the corners of the eyes, often called crow's feet, indicate a jovial disposition, and perpendicular wrinkles between the eyes denote a mischievous, happy temperament. The neck is of no little importance in the judging of character. The long, thin neck is the indication of an alert, nervous disposition; the short, thick neck denotes a dogged, pugnacious nature, while the long and very thin neck is said to be characteristic of the "old maid." A constant moving of the neck in conversation is a sign of the coquette. There are certain persons whom physiognomists say should be avoided by certain other persons. Thus, the talker is warned to keep away from the person with the overhanging forehead, for he will prove exceedingly deep in argument. The business man is advised to watch carefully when dealing with the man with the receding forehead and chin, the large, curved and prominent nose, for he will prove shrewd in business. And the person with the chip on his shoulder should keep away from the man (or woman either) with the retreating forehead, slightly turned up nose and thick, protruding lips, for he will prove vicious and will never fight fair. The person with the sharp, prominent chin and straight, firm mouth is usually an advocate of mutual love, but will take every advantage within the law. The person who carries himself with head erect and chest thrown out is self-reliant and determined, while the one with head carried forward and sunken chest will usually be found hesitating and pliable.

BOOSTERS FROM JESS WILLARD'S HOME TOWN GIVE AWAY $1 BILLS

"We Make It Every Day of Year, Spend It. More Where This Comes From," Is Lawrence, Kan., Novel Advertising Scheme.

By the Associated Press.

CHICAGO, June 28.—A delegation from Lawrence, Kan., began giving away dollar bills as souvenirs today on arrival here on the way to Toledo, where Champion Jess Willard, whose home is at Lawrence, will defend his title against Jack Dempsey. They had $6000 in $1 denominations and handed them out in hotels and cafes, but saved a goodly portion for Toledo, and sent Jim Corbett, an oil operator of Wichita, back to Lawrence for $5000 more.

Around each bill is a paper band bearing an imprint of a Kansas "Jay Hawk" on one side, and on the other the inscription, "We make it every day of the year. Spend it. There's lots more where this came from. Lawrence, Kan., home of Jess Willard, our champion."

The delegation was headed by "Billy" Hutson, president of the Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma Hotel Association, who is making arrangements for the organization convention, the week of Aug. 4 in connection with the hotel exposition here.

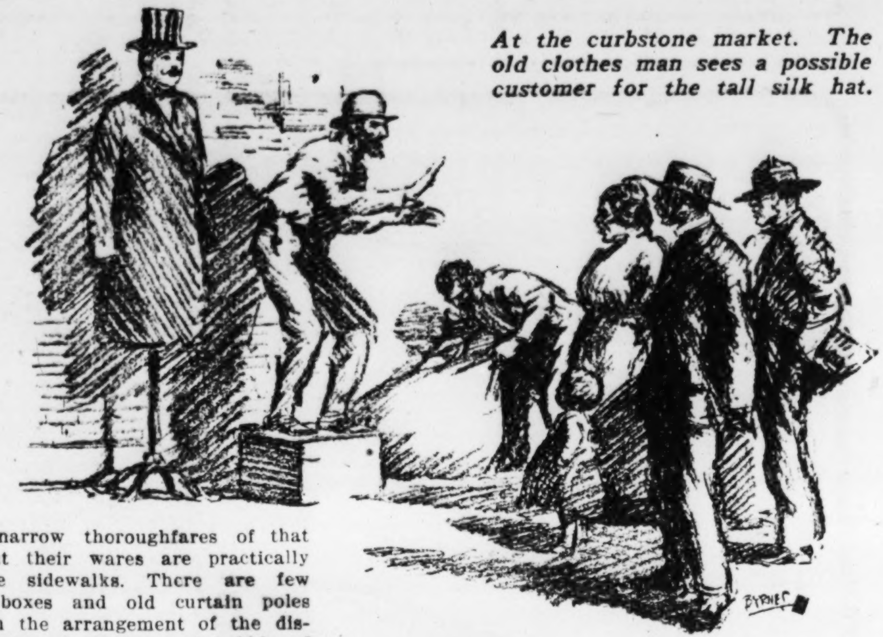
Where Your Cast-Off Clothing Goes

How the itinerant merchant who buys the things you don't want turns them into a profit at the St. Louis "curbstone markets" — The story of the discarded Prince Albert — Romance of the business — Many make fortunes at it—How it was boosted by wartime conditions



At the curbstone market. The old clothes man sees a possible customer for the tall silk hat.

HOW many times have you wondered what became of the cast-off clothes of West End folks? Did you ever see your last year's Prince Albert on dress parade in front of a negro church while you were driving by with your family for a Sunday outing?

Your wife knows the secret of the mysterious disappearance of your discarded raiment. She remembers the very day that a man came to your door and she sold him a whole bundle out of stuff of the attic.

But how did the colored preacher get that Prince Albert? A visit to a certain section of St. Louis most any afternoon will give you the answer.

Only the other day a curbstone second-hand clothing vendor stood on a soap box near Thirteenth and Carr streets. "Here, here," he called to an aged negro, unmistakably a dignitary of the colored church. "This is the very stuff for you. Your flock'll like your looks great in this next Sunday. It'll be a knockout."

And he stroked a high silk hat, perched on the head of a wooden dummy that stood on the edge of the curbing.

The old colored preacher musingly fingered the wisp of gray whiskers that hung from beneath a heavy lip. He walked a little closer to the dummy. Then he reached out slowly and removed its glistening headgear. He took off the rusty old hat he wore and that was so large it came down well over his ears and drooped almost to his cheeks. Then he "tried on" the fine, glossy hat that was offered by the curbstone mrchant. It slipped down over his ears and all but enveloped the furrowed black face.

"No, no," corrected the peddler as he deftly tipped the front of the hat brim and pushed the headpiece well over the back of the woolly top of the prospective purchaser. "You wear 'em a little further back. They look better that way."

The darky grinned. He knew it was a wily piece of deception. But what if it didn't fit? Wouldn't it make a fine impression on his congregation when he walked up the steps of the church Sunday morning? He was tempted. The vendor began to clinch the deal. "Yep, that come from one of the swellest birds in the West End," he continued. "Ain't been wore but a little bit. Set me back two bucks and a half to git it, but if you want it I'll make it to you for even $3."

There was another admiring inspection of the hat, a short dickering, the payment of the customary "four bits down" and a promise of weekly installments of 25 cents, to be paid each Monday in front of a certain saloon—and there went your old plug silk.

But that wasn't all. Everybody knows that no perfectly fashionable minister could wear a "stovepipe" without the frock-tail coat to match. The vendor had that in mind. He did not let his victim get away.

"Now, here's just what you oughtta have to go with that. It'll last fer years. Looks jist about like a fit fer you, too. Come over here and we'll try 'er on once."

The black divine laid his frayed and yellowed coat across the soap box while he slipped into the frock-tail culled from the stack of garments that laid on the walk,

It sagged in the back, to be sure, but the ebony-hued pastor didn't have time to notice that minor defect. The superfluous folds were quickly tucked up in one hand of the persuasive merchant, while with the other he smoothed down the satin neck part and slyly commented that it "couldn't fit better if ye'd been poured into it."

In another moment the peddler had carefully folded the coat and had it hanging on the arm of the preacher. Another sale had been consummated.

There went your Prince Albert.

And as the decrepit old colored leader trudged proudly down the street the vendor clapped his hands and shouted shrilly from the improvised auction stand on the soap box to attract the attention of another buyer.

There are many such dealers in this same district. From Twelfth street west for half a dozen blocks, or more, on Franklin, Morgan, Carr and other nearby streets there are dozens of curbstone merchants almost exactly like the one who outfitted the negro minister. In the morning hours they wend their way through the residence districts of the West End, buying the slightly worn or soiled clothes that have been relegated to the attic or the remotest corner of the closet. By noon their stock is quite complete and they lug it, generally in a big blue duck bag or over their arms, down to their stands.

Women engage in the business also. Some of them are Russian Jewesses, some of them Syrians and some of them Italians. Several of them maintain stores in tiny rooms or "holes-in-the-wall" along the narrow thoroughfares of that part of the city. But their wares are practically all displayed on the sidewalks. There are few inside. Chairs and boxes and old curtain poles are used effectively in the arrangement of the displays. There is a continual chatter and babble of tongues in their efforts to dispose of the goods. This is both fascinating and amusing. More ludicrous is the method sometimes employed by these women to demonstrate, perhaps to a rather striking, willowy type of Italian girl, the effect of the graceful lines of a certain frock. The saleswoman drapes her own ungainly figure with the dress and with an excited, gleeful, "See! See!" she promenades the sidewalk to show the stunning appearance of the model.

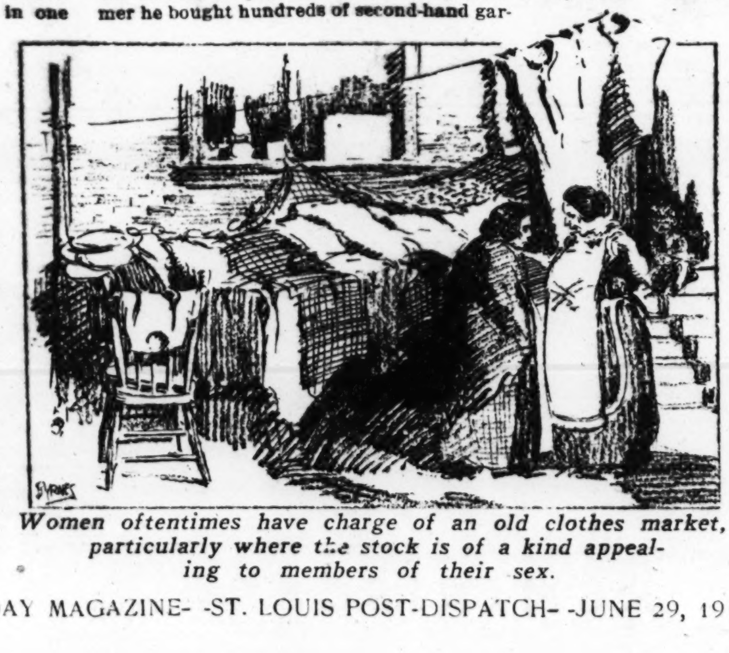
There is a bit of romance behind this business. Fortunes have been gleaned from the second-hand clothes game. Many times it has been the vehicle that has carried men into lucrative mercantile, clothing or other flourishing concerns. The investment is trifling and the profits are big. An old suit with which you are willing to part for a dollar (and at that figure you may calculate you're making "velvet") will bring from $3 to $8 or $9 on the curb. You are glad to get a half-dollar for your old "plug" hat, like the preacher bought for an "even three." Maybe you'll "throw in" an odd coat or pair of trousers in the bargain. And they are "turned" for 75 cents or a dollar apiece. Your wife feels lucky to rid herself of a pile of half a dozen or more old dresses for the price of a matinee ticket—just to get them out of the way and make more room in the closet. They are real bargains at the curbstone market for 50 cents and upwards each.

The war offered a special opportunity for old clothes dealers to "clean up." Thousands of persons who used to burn or otherwise destroy used clothing sold it to second-hand men during the war. They were prompted to do it for patriotic reasons. The Government everlastingly preached saving; saving of clothing, saving of food and saving of money. So the old clothes man reaped a rich harvest.

Only recently an old-clothes dealer bought an apartment house in the West End. His family moved into one of the apartments. They kept a car in a nearby garage. They formerly lived in a hovel downtown. Now they are rich—on old clothes.

Sam Bronstein, a bond broker with offices in the Central National Bank Building on Olive street, was a curbstone merchant in his earlier years. As a newsboy he sold papers on the street and extended credit to his patrons, later calling at their homes to gather up old clothes in payment for subscriptions. Every summer he bought hundreds of second-hand garments. In the fall he left for Memphis and other Southern towns, where he sold his stock to negroes who had just been paid for their season of picking in the cotton fields. From this beginning he was enabled to buy a clothing store. When greater success came to him he abandoned the clothing business to enter the financial world.

Even now Sam hies back occasionally to his old haunts over in the old-clothes district to talk shop for a few minutes with some of the street dealers. The game has it's fascination. There still lies an interest in it for him. And to the outsider it is one of the romantically interesting things of that peculiarly fascinating section of St. Louis.



Women oftentimes have charge of an old clothes market, particularly where the stock is of a kind appealing to members of their sex.

Only One Way to Treat Cancer

A HIGHLY important discussion on cancer, taken part in by many of the leading physicians and surgeons of New York, which took place at a meeting of the Bronx County Medical Society, is reported in the Medical Record. It followed the reading of a paper by Dr. Isaac Levin, clinical professor of cancer research, New York University and Bellevue Hospital Medical College, and chief of the department of cancer research, Montefiore Hospital.

Dr. Levin described and analyzed the latest discoveries in cancer, and showed that only the surgeon's knife and X-ray or radium treatment held out any hope of cure. This will be understood readily when one realizes what cancer really is. At some point in the body, due to some obscure cause, a cell or normal tissue is changed. Now the normal cells of adult organisms have no power to proliferate, that is, to multiply by division, and they are endowed with differentiated and highly specialized functions. A cancer cell is one that has lost its specialized functions and acquired the power to proliferate. This proliferation by division goes on until there are many cells, and these invade and destroy the surrounding tissues. Some of the cells are taken up by the lymph and transported to distant parts of the body, where they lodge and start a new cancer.

It is because of this tendency to migrate to distant points that surgery alone is successful in only a small number of cases, for it is impossible for the surgeon to know if such a migration has already taken place. And, if it has, of course, cutting out the original cancer does not remove the new one.

About 90 per cent of us have a natural immunity to cancer. And it seems that in some cases the organs attacked react and wall off the cancer with tissue that it cannot penetrate, thus effecting a spontaneous cure. These cases are rare, however.

Radium works in the following way: First, it inhibits the proliferating power of the cancer cells, that is, it stops their ability to multiply by division; then it destroys them, or at least leaves them in a condition in which they degenerate and die.

Every effort to find a medicine or vaccine against cancer has failed, for the disease is purely local. The most effective treatment is a correct combination of surgery, X-ray and radium.

Dr. Levin and others laid special emphasis on the necessity of the earliest possible diagnosis and blamed physicians more than their patients for not recognizing the suspicious lump or wart or tumor. Cancer is in no way infectious, even by contact, says Dr. Levin.

bridge. He still stood there, bareheaded, when she turned and smiled back at him, waving her hand. Then the slender figure vanished, and he was left alone. A moment later, Westcott was striding up the trail, intent upon a plan to entrap Lacy.

They would have felt less confident in the future could they have overheard a conversation being carried on in a room of the Timmons House. It was Miss La Rue's apartments, possessing two windows, but furnished in a style so primitive as to cause that fastidious young lady to burst into laughter when she first entered and gazed about. Both her companions followed her, laden with luggage, and Beaton, sensing instantly what had thus affected her humor, dropped his bag on the floor.

"It's the best there is here," he protested. "Timmons has held it for you three days."

"Oh, I think it is too funny, Ned," she exclaimed staring around, and then flinging her wraps on the bed. "Look at that mirror, will you, and those cracks in the wall? Say, do I actually have to wash in that tin basin? Lord! I didn't suppose there was such a place in the world. Why, if this is the prize, what kind of a room have you got?"

"Tough enough," he muttered gloomily, "but you was so close with your money I had to sing low. What was the matter with you, anyhow?"

"Sweetie wouldn't produce, or couldn't, rather. He hasn't got his hands on much of the stuff yet. Enright coughed up the expense money, or most of it. I made John borrow some, but I needed that myself."

"Well, damn little got out here, and Lacy pumped the most of that out of me. However, if you feel like kicking about this room you ought to see some of the others—mine, for instance, or the one Timmons put that other woman in."

"Oh, yes," she said, finding a seat and staring at him. "That reminds me. Did you say there was a girl here from New York? Never mind quarreling about the room, I'll endure it all right; it makes me think of old times," and she laughed mirthlessly. "Sit down, Mr. Enright, and let's talk. How's the door, Ned?"

He opened it and glanced out into the hall, throwing the bolt as he came back.

"All right, Celeste, but I wouldn't talk quite so loud; the partitions are not very tight."

"No objections to a cigarette, I suppose," and she produced a case. "Thanks; now I feel better—certainly, light up. Well, Ned, the first thing I want to know is, who is this other New York skirt, and how did she happen to blow in here just at this time?"

Beaton completed the lighting of his cigar, flinging the match carelessly out of the window.

"Oh, she's all right," he said easily. "Just an innocent kid writer for Scribbler's who's trying to make good writing about the beautiful scenery around here. I was a bit suspicious of her at first myself, but picked her up this morning an' we had quite a talk: Mighty pretty little girl."

Miss La Rue elevated her eyebrows, watchfully regarding him through smoke wreaths.

"Oh, cut it, Ned," she exclaimed curtly. "We all know you are a perfect devil with the women. The poor thing is in love with you, no doubt, but that doesn't answer my question; who is she?"

"Her name is Donovan."

"That sounds promising; what do you make it, shanty Irish?"

"I should say not," warmly. "She's a lady, all right. Oh, I know 'em, if I don't meet many of that kind. We got chummy enough, so she told me all about herself—her father's a big contractor and has money to burn."

"Did you ever hear the beat of that, Enright? Neddy is about to feather his nest. Well, go on."

"That's about all, I guess, only she ain't nothin' you need be afraid of."

"Sure not, with a watchdog like you on guard. But if you ask me, I don't like the idea of her happening in here just at this time. This is no place for an innocent child," and she looked about, her lip curling. "Lord, I should say not. Do you happen to remember any New York contractor by that name, Mr. Enright?"

The rotund lawye [illegible] 'eet elevated on the window sill, a cigar betwee [illegible] lips, shook his head in emphatic dissent.

"Not lately; there [illegible] Tim Donovan who had a pull in the subwa, exca [illegible]—he was a Tammany man—but he died, and was never married. There may have been others, of course, but I had tab on most of them. Did she mention his name, Beaton?"

"No; anyhow, I don't remember."

"What's the girl look like?"

"Rather slender, with brown hair, sorter coppery in the sun, and gray eyes that grow dark when she's interested. About 23 or 24, I should say. She's a good looker, all right, and not a bit stuck up."

"Did you get her full name?"

"Sure, it's on the register——Stella Donovan."

Enright lowered his feet to the floor, a puzzled look on his face, his teeth clinched on his cigar.

"Hold on a bit till I think," he muttered. "That sounds mighty familiar—Stella Donovan! My God, I've heard that name before somewhere; ah, I have it—she's on the New York Star. I've seen her name signed to articles in the Sunday edition." He wheeled and faced Miss La Rue. "Do you remember them?"

"No; I never see the Star."

"Well, I do, and sometimes she's damn clever. I'll bet she's the girl."

"A New York newspaper woman; well, what do you suppose she is doing out here? After us?"

Enright had a grip on himself again and slowly relit his cigar, leaning back and staring out the window. His mind gripped the situation coldly.

"Well, we'd best be careful," he said slowly. "Probably it's merely a coincidence, but I don't like her lying to Beaton. That don't look just right. Yet the Star can't have anything on us; the case is closed in New York; forgotten and buried nearly a month ago. Even my partner don't know where I am."

"I had to show John the telegram in order to get some money."

"You can gamble he won't say anything—there's no one else?"

"No; this game ain't the kind you talk about."

"You'd be a fool to trust anybody. So, if there's no leak we don't need to be afraid of her, only don't let anything slip. We'll lay quiet and try the young lady out. Beaton here can give her an introduction to Miss La Rue, and the rest is easy. What do you say, Celeste?"

"Oh, I'll get her goat; you boys trot on now while I tog up a little for dinner; when is it, 6 o'clock?"

"Yes," answered Beaton, still somewhat dazed by this revealment of Miss Donovan's actual identity. "But don't try to put on too much dog out here, Celeste; it ain't the style."

"The simple life, eh! What does your latest charmer wear—a skirt and a shirtwaist?"

"I don't know; she was all in black, but looked mighty neat."

"Well, I'll go her one better—a bit of Broadway for luck. So long, both of you, and, Enright, you better come up for me; Ned, no doubt, has a previous engagement with Miss Donovan."

Mr. Enright paused at the door, his features exhibiting no signs of amusement.

"Better do as Beaton says, make it plain," he said shortly. "The less attention we attract the less talk there will be, and this is too damn serious an affair to be bungled. You hear?"

She crossed over and rested her hands on his arm.

"Sure; I was only guying Ned—it's a shirtwaist for me. I'll play the game, old man."

PROHIBITION AND DRUGS

A Medical Journal Tells What May Be Expected to Happen With the Exit of Alcohol.

IF we may reason from what has happened in those States where real prohibition has existed for several years, it is safe, says the Medical Record editorially, to predict an increase in drug addiction with the exit of alcohol. Not that all alcoholics will become "coke" fiends or heroin addicts, for some will die or go daft and many others will gradually lose their longing and recover normal health, but a fair proportion of those now seeking surcease of care and worry in alcohol will be driven to find it in opium or coca derivatives. Others will get the necessary stimulation from caffeine, and the consumption of coffee and tea will doubtless increase, with perhaps the addition of mate and similar little known South American "yarbs."

Then there will be the multitude of "soft" drinks—the near beer, the unfermented juice of the grape, of the apple, the pineapple, the loganberry, the orange, and some other fruits now little known or cultivated. These fruit juices, still or sparkling, but unfermented, will doubtless take the place of wine when the present dwindling private stocks of the latter are exhausted, and for the majority of moderate drinkers, who seldom take enough to "feel" it, they will answer in fair measure the esthetic and sociable requirements of wine.

The effect prohibition will have on the health of the community will vary according to circumstances. The alcoholics who switch off to drugs will be bettered or made worse according to the degree of the previous abuse of alcohol and that the present abuse of drugs, and also according to the particular drug chosen as the "dope." The moderate and voluntary drinkers of alcoholic beverages who simply stop will be no better and no worse in health, though better in pocket; if they substitute "near" drinks in moderation they will suffer no change in health, but if they increase their consumption of caffeine-containing beverages they will be decidedly worse off.

Rescued From "No Boy's Land"

dent Wolfe had the entire organization meet in the assembly room and he made a speech telling his men why he had undertaken to help the boy he had found struggling in a sort of a "No Boy's Land" in St. Louis. He added, that it was such an inviting undertaking that he felt like letting his boys in on it if they were so disposed, but at the same time they were assured that he was making no request for a division of the responsibility. The responses came quickly from all parts of the hall and at the end of the meeting there were many little weekly pledges entered by the secretary. These, however, will go to the fund for the relief of other deserving cases. While President Wolfe wants his men to share in the satisfaction of underwriting the way through school of the little boy from St.Louis, he and Mrs. Wolfe have already completed the business arrangements which will amply take care of his future. They plan to let the boy spend his vacations at their own home, which is a large, airy establishment, surrounded by several acres of ground and is just the place for such a boy as they have undertaken to raise.

Collins, who has spent many busy hours trying to solve the difficulties that confronted this boy, is quite well delighted with the happy outcome. "I am as well pleased with the happy solution of this case,' he said, "as it is possible to feel. No honor or personal benefit that might come to me could begin to make me feel as happy as the assurance of this boy's training and future. It was providential Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe happened to be here the day the boy's story was presented in the Post-Dispatch, and there was kindly fate in the fact that it was Sunday and he had ample time to read; otherwise, the case might not have reached his attention. Occurences of this kind are stimulating and encouraging; they give you renewed confidence in the fact that there is more kindness and broad-gauge human sympathy in the world than we sometimes suspect. The action of Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe in this case is a wonderful illustration of practical and whole-hearted philanthropy and the result will vindicate their unselfish, kindly experiment. They will make of this boy, should he live through the course, a man who will be heard from in years to come, despite his present sad limitations.

La-may Face Powder Is Harmless to the Most Delicate Skin

Now you can use a pure face powder that is guaranteed not to injure the most delicate baby skin. It will not cause enlarged pores, blackheads and irritations. And, it really stays on better than any other face powder. It does not contain white lead or starchy rice powder (Poudre de Riz) to make it stick. White lead poisons the skin and rice powder turns into a gluey paste that encourages enlarged pores, blackheads and rice powder pimples. The specialist who makes this improved powder uses a medicinal ingredient that doctors use to heal the skin. In fact, this new powder helps to prevent and reduce enlarged pores and pimples. It is also astringent, discouraging flabbiness, crows' feet and wrinkles. Because it is pure and because it stays on so well this La-may powder (French, Poudre L'Ame) is now used by over a million American women. The large size is only fifty cents and the trial size is twenty-five cents. Remember, La-may is guaranteed absolutely pure. (One thousand dollars reward is offered to anybody who can buy a better face powder anywhere at any price). Refuse substitutes. Your common sense will tell you that when you are offered a substitute it is sure to be a demonstrator trying to sell an inferior powder that pays a big commission. When you use this absolutely pure La-may and see how splendidly it beautifies your complexion, you will understand why it so quickly became the most popular beauty powder sold in New York. Save this notice. La-may Rouge is also pure.

How a Story in the Sunday Magazine Lifted Ernest Smith Out of "No Boy's Land"

Wonderful educational program mapped out for orphan boy who is deaf, dumb and blind — Wealthy Ohio manufacturer who believes in practical philanthropy to educate him as Helen Keller was trained and at same institution — Special teacher now has pupil in charge and his future is assured — Zeal shown by Blind School President in this happy solution :: :: ::

SID WHITING PORTRAIT

Martin J. Collins, who initiated the movement to help Ernest Smith.

CHANCE and a good Samaritan working in delightful harmony have permanently and most effectively removed little Ernest Smith from the threatened horrors of "No Boy's Land." This sturdy little fellow, whose manifold afflictions formed the basis for an article in the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine of May 4, need have no worry now because his blindness keeps him out of the school for the deaf and dumb, while his total inability to hear or speak bars him from the privileges and advantages of the Missouri School for the Blind. His good Samaritan, ably backed by his volunteer foster parent and the whole-hearted teamwork attending the entire affair, has provided a home, a future and an education that will be as thorough as that given Miss Helen Keller, that wonderful woman who rose above and beyond the same infirmities that now shut out the light, sound and speech from this child's world.

Ernest Smith is now at Cape Cod, Mass., with Miss Vinnie Forbush, a special teacher, who will undertake to give him the identical course of study and training that was given Miss Keller by Miss Anne Mansfield Sullivan, who is now Mrs. John A. Macy. Next September he will enter Perkins Institution and Massachusetts School for the Blind, where Miss Keller received her education. Miss Forbush, who will give her entire time to this one pupil, is a special teacher of high rank in Boston and has specialized in the training of the blind and of deaf mutes. Her training was received at the Horace Mann School for the Deaf, and she has long given all her attention to this character of instruction. With such a teacher and outlook, not to mention the thorough arrangements already perfected for his future maintenance, Ernest Smith will be equipped to take care of himself, despite all the handicaps thrust upon him so early in his life.

If anything, Ernest is, or rather was, in a much more difficult situation than Miss Keller, as she had loving parents, who were willing to sacrifice their all for the sake of their sadly afflicted child. Not so in Ernest's case. He has never known father or mother and since his earliest babyhood he has been the ward of some organization or another, seeking to help the poor and the afflicted. Moved from one agency to another, each doing its part to the best of its capacity, he, at the age of 11, found himself the ward of the St. Louis Board of Children's Guardians, which, in the operation of its system, found him a home with a private family on San Francisco avenue. It was due to the combination of Ernest's afflictions that his plight was called to the attention of Col. Martin J. Collins, vice president of the Graham Paper Co., member of the Governor's staff and president of the Board of Managers of the Missouri School for the Blind.

The boy had been attending the Central School for the Deaf at 818 South King's highway, and did well until his blindness, which had afflicted him from infancy, became well-nigh total, which necessitated his removal to the blind school for further education. Here there was difficulty, because the system is limited to boys and girls who can speak and hear. It was then that Collins, who has a fondness for children at all times, and especially those who seemingly have no one else to care for them, became interested, and once he got started developments came in a hurry for Ernest Smith. Collins went to Jefferson City while the Legislature was in session and tried to have an appropriation made that would enable the School for the Blind to employ a special tutor.

It was a bad time to visit the State capital, as the Legislature was busy raising salaries, cutting down appropriations for eleemosynary institutions and passing the mud-road bills; hence it had no time to consider the woes of Ernest Smith; and besides, there was the Constitution looking on in silent horror at the very thought of such a thing. It was then that Collins undertook to get some of his friends interested to the extent of providing a fund to hire a teacher. At this stage, little Ernest for the first time in his dark and silent life found his way into print, or rather had such attention forced upon him through the medium of the Post-Dispatch Sunday Magazine, and if the solemn assurance of Collins is to be accepted, Ernest's guardian angel was up and doing about that same time.

It was on Sunday, May 4, that a business trip brought Maurice Wolfe, president of the Meteor Motor Car Co. of Piqua, O., to St. Louis, and Mrs. Wolfe happened to come along. They spent the day resting at their hotel and read the Post-Dispatch. Because Mrs. Wolfe had been reading the story of Helen Keller's life, the case of the Smith child made a decided impression on her mind. This shortly crystallized into a decision, which met with emphatic support from her husband. Though the day was Sunday, they decided to locate the boy, and after repeated calls on various telephones, they reached Collins, who was catching up with some of his work in his office downtown. Having gladly undertaken the responsibility of foster father for the unfortunate boy, he was quick to enter into the big plan of the Wolfes to provide training and a home on the same scale of thoroughness that attended the education of Miss Keller. He drove them to the home where the boy was quartered and there they spent the greater part of the afternoon.

That Sunday decided the future of Ernest Smith and relieved the Missouri Legislature of any further solicitation for a special teacher for the boy who just didn't quite fit in with any scheme devised for the afflicted. Since then the Wolfes, from their home at Piqua, and Collins, handling the St. Louis end of the negotiations, have made all the arrangements covering the boy's future. This explains why the boys out on San Francisco avenue miss the company of the queer little chap, who, though blind and unable to hear or speak, insisted on running about with them, and even climbing fences when the play called for such violent exercise. It also tells why some of the shopkeepers up in that district feel that they have lost a friend, for Ernest knew them all, and had a way of making them understand that he wanted their friendship. He always carried his smile with him and when he ran into a door or bumped against anything else that happened to be in his sightless way, he never cried or let it be known that he was really hurt.

The investigation conducted by the wealthy Ohio benefactor of the afflicted boy convinced him that there was material in the little fellow's makeup that was well worth development, especially along lines of his mechanical tastes. He found that by exercising the senses that remained with him the child was able to do many things that would never occur to a normal boy of 11 years. Placed in a workshop where there were tools and machinery, this little boy would move about the floor and make a thorough investigation of his surroundings, in the meanwhile making a wonderful use of his senses of smell and touch. Then he would try to get his hands on the tools and show that he knew their various functions. Being a thorough mechanic himself, Wolfe was amazed at the energy and initiative of such a young and pathetically afflicted child. He was deeply moved and his wife, who aided in the investigation, was similarly impressed. Having no children of their own and sharing a deep affection for childhood, they never faltered, once they started out to do something worth while for the boy who could feel the sunshine and enjoy the things he could neither see nor hear.

While they were making their arrangements, a fund of $2200 was raised by Collins, the original purpose of which was to supply the special teacher at the blind school. There were 22 donors, each subscribing $100 and through an arrangement approved by all concerned the amount will be deposited to the credit of the "Ernest Smith Fund" and will be held for any emergency that may ensue. The subscribers to the fund were Col. Collins, Edwin A. Lemp, Gus von Brecht, Clarence H. Howard, Gov. Frederick D. Gardner, A. L. Shapleigh, P. B. Fouke, J. C. Reid, Benjamin Gratz, Walter V. Scholz, P. E. Conroy, E. T. Williams, George D. Markham, S. S. Pingree, S. L. Willson, J. P. Tirrill, Festus J. Wade, W. K. Bixby, Nathan Frank, Murray Carleton, G. A. Buder and Edward Hidden. None of this money will be used by Mr. Wolfe in his plan of equipping the boy for his future station in life and the fund will be permitted to grow until Ernest is of age.

When Ernest was taken to Piqua, where he stopped to spend a few days with his benefactor and benefactress it was the first time in his life that he had traveled on a railroad train, and though he could not hear or see what it was all about, he lost no time in getting his investigation started once he was escorted to the Pullman and assigned his berth. He was accompanied by Collins and Supt. S. M. Green of the Missouri School for the Blind. The boy was thrilled with this novel experience and could hardly be forced to bed, as his investigation was uppermost in his mind and the other passengers in the car were all willing to aid him in his researches. Nothing in that sleeper escaped the boy, even though he could not see or hear. He felt everything from one end to the other and the vibrations that passed through his body told him that he was moving, and at a very rapid rate, much faster than he had ever moved before. His study of the berth after it was made up was watched with keen interest by the men and women passengers, who were at a loss to understand how a child so badly afflicted could be in such a merry mood.

Ernest's day at the large plant of the Meteor Motor Car Co. at Piqua doubtless will long linger in his happier recollections. This factory, which employs some 250 men and a few women, manufactures motor hearses and phonographs, and as President Wolfe has some strong convictions on the subject of industrial democracy, he has a large welfare organization in his establishment. One of his practices is to provide a bonus to encourage saving among his workers. Under this arrangement, $1 per week is added to the savings accounts of those who regularly deposit something out of each week's pay. If an employe puts away only $1, the company adds another, which is tantamount to a bonus of $52 per year to those who save something each weekly payday. In addition to this arrangement, he maintains an insurance plan which protects his men against disability, retirement and death. Labor troubles in his factory are unknown and a spirit of co-operation and understanding permeates every department from the front office to the coal bins.

A MERE MAN'S ADVENTURE IN SHOPPING

By James Montague.

"MEET me in the women's dresses," said the Head of the Family, "at 2 o'clock. I'll be there somewheres."

I do not like to go to the women's dresses, which is the name of one of the floors in a department store, where men are looked on much as Germans are looked on in France. But men must work and women must shop, and it was necessary for us to meet at the hour of 2 in order to keep a common appointment with a commutation train. So, little recking what I did, I promised.

I found on applying to a handsomely dressed man in the door of the establishment that the women's dresses were on the fourth floor. If I had been able to dip into the future I would have taken the stairs. But I wasn't, so in company with perhaps 16 women I routed myself by the elevator.

In order to be as unobtrusive as possible I sought the furthest corner of the car, which was a mistake. We arrived at the fourth floor without difficulty, but none of my fellow passengers appeared to want any women's dresses on that trip. They stayed where they were, locking me fast in my corner.

There was no use to be unpleasant about it. I stayed where I was till we got to the restaurant—on the eighth floor, where there was a general disembarkation.

"Restaurant—all out," said the elevator man.

I looked at him haughtily, and stayed where I was.

"All out—restaurant," said the elevator man, trying a new combination on me.

"I don't want to get out." I said in the low voice I employ when I want to hide embarrassment.

"Why not?"

"Because I want to go to the women's dresses."

"That's on the fourth floor."

"I know it."

The elevator man gave me a searching look, heaved a long, helpless sigh and started the car down once more.

We picked up a goodly company—all women—on the various floors between us and the women's dresses, but I managed to get into a fairly strategic position. There were only two women in front of me when we reached the fourth floor. But, as I was presently to discover, there were serried ranks of them behind me.

I tried to get out quietly and gracefully, but several waves of women in my rear were in a hurry and I was propelled forward with such violence that my hand, aimed to steady myself on the door casing, came into sudden contact with the shoulder of the lady just ahead.

I avoided her eyes as she looked swiftly back at me, and attempted to execute a flank movement and escape. But it was no use. She overhauled me before I had gone five steps, and observed in a tense voice:

"Gentlemen don't prod ladies in the shoulder."

I moved away. She followed me, remarking to another woman who was passing:

"He prodded me in the shoulder."

The other woman adjusted her lorgnette and looked me over. There was nothing for me but flight, so I made for a providentially placed telephone booth and pretended to put in a call.

For a few seconds I affected to be in earnest conversation, then I looked over my shoulder.

The lady I had collided with was there, together with half a dozen others. The telephone booth was sound proof, but her lips moved, and I knew what she was saying. I returned to my fake telephone conversation.

To my surprise, the company dissolved without calling the police.

In those alien areas of department stores which are carpeted, hung with draperies and peopled with women, I never know whether or not to take off my hat. It seems the thing to do out of deference to the prevalent sex, yet one sees very fashionable looking men, who seem thoroughly at home there, sitting or standing, with their hats on. This time I decided to do what the dictates of courtesy demanded. I removed my hat and twiddled it uneasily in my hands, as I cast about for her whom I sought.

Presently I saw several customers eyeing it with disfavor. It was a hat of which I am fond, but it was neither new nor handsome. I set it on a chair and continued my search.

I was suddenly conscious that a lady was addressing me.

"I want to see some of your voiles," she said.

"I am sorry, madame," I replied, "but I haven't a voile to my name."

"Do you mean to tell me"——

Then it occurred to me that she had mistaken me for someone else.

"If you will just ask one of those gentlemen," I began.

But she stalked away.

A man easily wearies in a department store. It is a singular thing, and one which science has never explained, that the same male who will stand for hours in front of a bar will find the pregnant hinges of the knee caving in under him after three minutes of shopping. I decided to sit down and found a chair.

There was a little dismayed cry as I sank gratefully into it.

"My tulle!" said the cry. "My tulle!"

I shot back into a standing position, while an angry hand pulled from under me a section of mosquito bar I had mistaken for a tidy.

There was still no sign of the Head of the Family. I was getting nervous, but long experience has taught me that hunting is not of the slightest use. You must just stand in one place, and if she is there she is bound to pass you sooner or later.

I look at my watch and it was 2:30—which, making the regular allowance, was just 15 minutes before the time I might expect her to make the 2 o'clock appointment. Since the episode of the tulle I could see that I was getting talked about.

Little groups were whispering here and there and looking at me, and I observed that I was the center of a large circle in which there were no men. No man likes to be the observed of all observers when the observers are shoppers in a department store. I strolled over to the window to look out on the traffic. I strolled a trifle too close to a stand that was hung with bewitching garments, and upset it. I caught it just in time to avoid a catastrophe, but precipitated a disaster, nevertheless. Three gowns sifted gently to the floor and at least a dozen stock girls—as I believe they are termed—leaped forward to pick them up. All of them regarded me as a cat regards a dog.

A soft hand fell on my shoulder.

"Your wife," said its owner, as I started guiltily, "is trying on a dimity and wants you to come in and look at it."

I didn't know what a dimity was, but I was delighted at the diversion. Furthermore, I had succeeded in my quest. She must have seen me and sent for me.

I threaded my way in the wake of the saleswoman through a series of mahogany-flanked corridors, ducking carefully to avoid ladies who swished through there, and at last, as the lady stepped aside, walked through a door and beheld in what appeared to my terrified eyes to be a nightie, a perfectly strange woman.

I stood for a second, transfixed, while she hastily caught up a pile of fluff from the floor and threw it about her bare shoulders and down over two extremely long stockings.

Then she gave tongue. "Take that man out of here!" she shrieked.

The Head of the Family thinks that I am going to keep another appointment with her in this same department store Tuesday week, when we are going to meet in the city. But she is wrong.

Why Even Good Swimmers Drown

dislodged and the interference is removed. Then the swimmer will quickly realize that he is in no danger at all. He will be able to fall into his stroke and even forget that he was imperiled.

"Every swimmer, no matter how skilled he may be, is liable at some time to find himself in this situation, and very often he continues to struggle along with this handicap, exhausting his strength with every stroke until his limbs are numbed and helpless, and then if help is not given at once, he is going to drown. If he would only bear in mind when he first feels the water in his windpipe that he must get rid of it at once, and that the result can be achieved quickly, there would be a wonderful diminution in the number of accidental drownings and we would hear much less about 'cramps.' The water that is inhaled through the mouth or nose and gets in the breathing passages is infinitely worse than the larger quantities that get into the stomach, and when one realizes what an easy thing it is to get relief he really marvels why good swimmers so completely lose their heads as to forget what is so manifestly the proper thing to do.

"Those who go to the aid of a drowning person, or one who seems to be in such danger, should bear in mind that this first aid should be given without waiting to get the one who is in distress ashore. If he has been struggling to catch his breath he may perish before he can be helped to the bank. It is a simple thing indeed to apply the pressure necessary to force out the water and thus restore the arrested respiration. Those who go to the help of drowning men or women should never neglect this essential requirement. It is better, of course, to follow the safer method which I have undertaken to illustrate, because drowning persons have a way of making that ancient tradition of 'grasping at straws,' or anything else, stand up on all occasions. But if the safer method cannot be readily employed, the other plan must be resorted to, as the relief must not be delayed a second, and the good samaritan is taking chances in a very worthy cause.

"Then we have the foolish people, who go in for a hard swim right after a hearty meal, with the stomach filled with food and the digestive organs working overtime. Men, and women, too, meet with quick mishaps for this reason, and then the old-school theorists come along and charge it up to 'cramps.' In reality it is the heart that is making all the trouble, and when you stop to think you will agree that that very important organ is justified in its misconduct. These seizures are very quick and violent, yet many who have been taken out apparently dead were brought around after vigorous restorative application.

There is absolutely no excuse for such gambling with death, but despite the long history of fatal consequences you will see people do this thing over and over again. Many of the distressing tales that come with the Sundays in the outing season are directly traceable to such indiscretions. People go out for recreation and, having their lunch baskets along, they proceed to eat heartily and then plunge into the cool water for a swim. When they are rescued, if it should be their good fortune to be saved, they wonder just how it happened; it all came on so suddenly, you know.

"Another point that cannot be handled with too much emphasis is the treatment given the limp victims who are taken out apparently dead and rolled upon the shore by their would-be rescuers. In the excitement and confusion easily accounted for on such occasions, people are liable to forget, hence it is not unusual that they let the victim down face and nose first in the sand, with no chance to breathe, even though the respiratory organs are striving hard to resume their normal functions. Care should accordingly be taken, when the artificial respiration is under way, to raise the head on a stone, a pile of sand or a coat, thus permitting the unrestricted passage of the air to where it is most needed. In the early stage of the treatment, before the subject is placed on his back, the pressure on the stomach and chest should be employed regularly, about 15 times per minute, whether it is the Silvester or the Shaeffer method that is used.

"The pressure must be gradual and the hands should be withdrawn quickly. This creates the suction necessary to draw the air where it must go if the person is to be revived. Very often this is overlooked by those who seek, with the best of intentions, to give aid. Another thing, the rescuers should never get discouraged, and even though the resuscitation process calls for hard work they should not give up the fight, and certainly not until a doctor pronounces the case entirely hopeless. Many deaths, no doubt, have occurred just because the people who were trying to help gave up the battle too soon. It is indeed a wonderful satisfaction, after a long, desperate fight, to look into the eyes of your subject and see the light of returning consciousness. When you see that, you know that you have won, and you respond with every bit of strength you have in you to make your victory a certainty.

"I have found in my experience that while the pulmotor and the oxygen tank have their uses in the resuscitation of persons dragged from the water, it is always better to use either the Silvester or Shaeffer methods for at least five minutes, before employing either the one or the other. In most cases the desired result is accomplished in that time, whereas the gas or the instrument might have a harmful rather than a beneficial effect, if used at once, because if water or slime remain in the lungs or the delicate passages leading thereto, havoc might attend the employment of these modern agencies."

What Happens to Poor Husbands of Rich Women?

Evidence of cases which have terminated unhappily reveals short life of love when men were dependent upon wealth of wives, but romance leads other daughters of money kings to lowly mates eager to make the venture

> Jean: Don't step down, Miss; take my advice. Nobody would believe that you stepped down willingly; the people would always say that you fell down.
> Countess Julie: I have climbed to the top of a pillar and see no possibility of getting down. I grow dizzy when I look down. I must get down, but I don't dare to jump. I seem to be losing my hold and I want to fall, but I don't. And yet I can have no peace until I get down, no rest until I get down on the ground.

> —August Strindberg.

SHOULD a poor man permit a rich woman to marry him?

The question is raised again—that ancient problem—by romances in the Tuck-French family, one growing green as the other turns gray. Just as Mrs. Julia French Geraghty seeks a divorce from her husband, once her chauffeur, the young woman's aunt, Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt, marries an impecunious young naval officer. All possible good wishes to all concerned—still, there is the perplexity.

In his "Froken Julie," Strindberg sets down an interpretation of the moving forces behind the marriages of the lofty lady and the lowly man. He aspires to the high perches and the golden eggs; she yearns down for her leaven of clay. One quite as natural as the other, for the high wines of election make the palate feverish for humble water, just as the thin fluid of poverty fills one with emptiness for the unattainable Falernian. Palates weary of marchpane, nostrils of patchouli. They strain for the unknown common savor of dry bread and the reputed sweetness of the soil. Quite sufficient explanation, this, of the why of such unions; justification enough for either side. But the agitation quandary persists.

Should a man do it? This postulates the more concrete query: Can he do it successfully? Frankly, I do not intend to answer. I am too wise and not wise enough. Instead, let us, with careful legal circumspection, adduce and contemplate the evidence. Let us, like Solomon, put the rival claims to the human test.

The examples, which make up the evidence in a matter of this sort, are numerous enough. We may as well begin with the cases in hand.

About nine years ago Miss Julia French, of the Amos Tuck-Frenches of Newport, and related by a then recent marital infelicity to the Vanderbilts, eloped with her motor driver, later yclept "Handsome Jack" Geraghty. There was a row among the elite and aloof. Indeed, there was so much feeling about the thing that the bride's parents are said to have quarreled and parted as a result. But Julia French cleaved to her chauffeur, and he to his rich wife. Now, she wants a divorce from him, accusing him of various faults and foibles, most of them based, in the last analysis, on his lack of money and "breeding," really synonyms from the American point of view. The marriage was, apparently, a failure. True, many other marriages, into which the element of differing financial standing does not enter, fail in much shorter time. But let us keep the evidence relevant.

The other romance in the French family, that involving the aforementioned young woman's aunt and her young officer, offers no evidence. They've just been wed and all the moon is still dripping syrup. Mrs. Elsie French Vanderbilt-Fitzsimmons' earlier essay at matrimony may, however, be cited. She and Alfred Vanderbilt were sweethearts in the younger years and were wed to the applause of the best dowager judgment in the country. Money in hogsheads on both sides, even more with the man. At the end of an experimental period of moderate duration—divorce. So the failures are not all to the poor man.

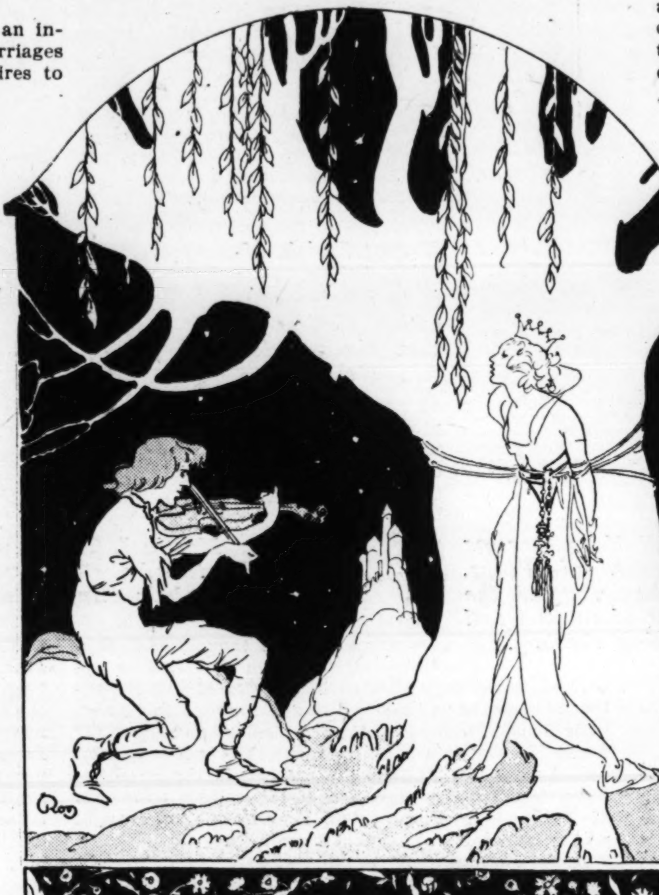
Nothing conclusive here, to be sure. More cases, more evidence! Why not go back a bit?

The case of Franz Liszt offers something worth noting. First the Comtesse d'Agoult and later the Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein tried union with the cyclonic music master, each with some years of happiness for Liszt to her credit. But both these arrangements came to grief in the end, for reasons not entirely disconnected with material things.

Louise, Crown Princess of Saxony, eloped, some years ago, with the tutor of her children. They were happy for a short time, and then miserably at war. They soon parted and Louise, who had given up a throne for her romance, passed on to another lowly lover, with little better success, to be sure.

The Princess Carman-Chimay, who had been Clara Ward of Detroit, eloped one mad night with our old and droll friend, Jancsi Rigo, a gypsy fiddler of infinite caprice. They were as happy as two hedge wrens for some years, wildly and vagrantly in love. They traveled about from country to country on her abundant money and Rigo's fetching fiddlery. Then the statuesque ex-Princess found her eye languishing for another mate. Rigo was jettisoned; the wild romance collapsed like a punctured balloon. Rigo, or so he says, never found it in his Tzigane heart to object to his wife's money. Perhaps she may have resented his lack of it. And she fared no better with the next man, who had less, surely, than Rigo.

On the other hand, Jan Kubelik, the Hungarian violinist, married the divorced Countess Czaky. To all appearances they are happy. At least, their marriage has been successful enough to last. Perhaps this is not a representative case, however. The Countess is not very rich, and Kubelik has always earned ponderable sums with his concertizing.



Neither can the case of Enrico Caruso and Dorothy Park Benjamin be counted, however this recent romance may terminate. The tenor is a rich man. His lowly origin, the disparity in ages and the grand opera temperament must be counted as much more vital factors in the be and not be of this marriage. Not to speak of the family hostility from the bride's side of the house.

Then, there was the case of the Aurel Batonyis, which filled so many dismal columns of newspaper space some years ago. He was a smart whip and social personage, but poor; she the daughter of that doughty old millionaire, Frank Work. The father did not approve of his daughter's choice; they eloped. There were years of struggle and final parting. A failure.

And finally there are the conspicuous recent cases, local to New York.

Giulia Morosini's marriage with Policeman Arthur Werner belongs to another day, but the debacle of their happiness and the sordid divorce were matters of sympathy only recently. Here was, surely, a case containing all the typical elements. Miss Morosini, daughter of a very rich and stiff-necked banker, meets and falls in love with the sturdy, good-looking police officer. The story is current, at least, that the meeting came about through the runaway of her horse and his rescue. The dour father, who has almost a mania against the poor suitor, feeling with a certain instinct the mercenary urge behind such courtings, will have no contact with the cop. But when the old man of money finally dies, his daughter weds the man. He is married, as fate orders such things, and a divorce from his wife must be had and paid for. No matter; he is worth the ransom.

There follow a short happiness, a harsh disillusion and some years of agonized temporizing with lacklove and embittered hopes. Then an annulment, with ugly recriminations and the suggestion that the wife finally has to buy her freedom, even as she bought release for her husband at an earlier time. A costly venture for the woman, and probably a bad one for the man.

There was, a dozen years ago, when the automobile was still a new and impressive instrument of locomotion, a very panic of elopements between rich girls and chauffeurs. There is a long list of them, but it is idle to enumerate them, since there is no record of their eventuation.

One remembers, however, Miss Margaret Leavitt, the daughter of Millionaire G. H. Leavitt, an old Knickerbocker family. The girl fled to a Jersey City Justice and married Chauffeur Joseph Smollen, sometimes called "the Candy Kid." There was a separation at the end of five weeks, and six months later the bride died, leaving the man nothing but bitterness in her will.

Still more recent was the pathetic case of Miss Julia Breitung, daughter of E. N. Breitung, who eloped with Max Kleist, the family gardener. The bliss lasted eight days. Then her parents persuaded her to come home, and shortly afterward came the usual suit for divorce.

Even so sane and practical a fellow as old Dick Croker, the one-time Tammany ahkoond, had the romantic strain in him. He married sentimentally and late in life. He also transmitted the impulse by heredity. His youngest daughter, Ethel, eloped with John J. Breen, a groom. In six months there was a filing of papers for divorce.

With all due allowance for explanations of one sort or another, a melancholy roster. On the evidence submitted, a poor young man takes his all in his hand when he intrusts his freedom to a woman with money. Perhaps some perverse people will choose to look at this thing from the point of view of the woman, considering her the chief sufferer by matches which pass in the courts. It is not difficult to point out the Victorian fallacy of this contention.

A rich woman can afford ill-starred marriages —the number being limited only by the size of her accumulations or inheritances. Her poor husband has but one set of aspiring illusions to give. Not much, peradventure, but his all. And they have not yet become civilized enough, with all the talk of sex equality, to pay alimony to disenchanted husbands.

So the case stands. The young men of no fortune who will be deterred, by the melancholy nature of this compilation, from marrying dowered brides, are so numerous as to be counted on the hairs of the frog and the scales of the catfish.

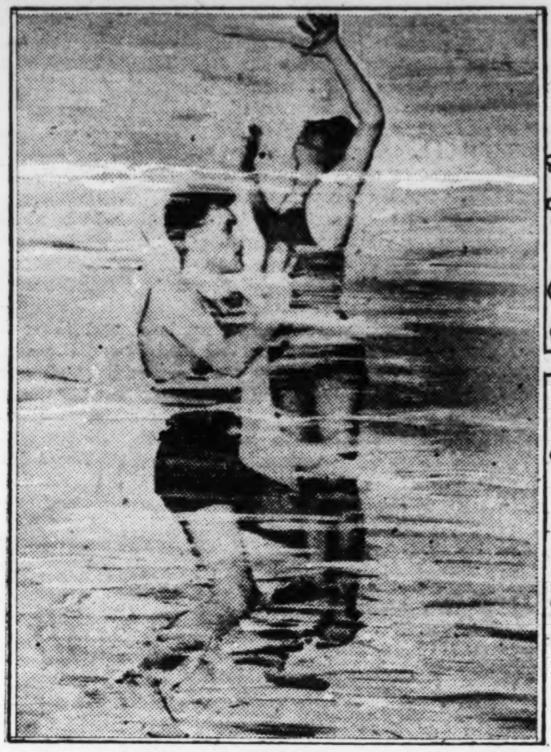
What testimony will the war bring to the subject for consideration? It is difficult to say. War romances are too new to have developed an acid test. There have been no small number of matings between women of wealth and poor young officers, and even enlisted men, and it is to be hoped that, welded in the trials of war, these unions will for the most part stand the strains of peace. War has done much in other directions to break down the barriers of wealth and caste.

And the airplane? It has been noted that the automobile brought a whole train of marriages between the paid man at the steering wheel and the girl in the tonneau. And before the automobile came the elopements of coachman and lady were a not infrequent theme of song and story.

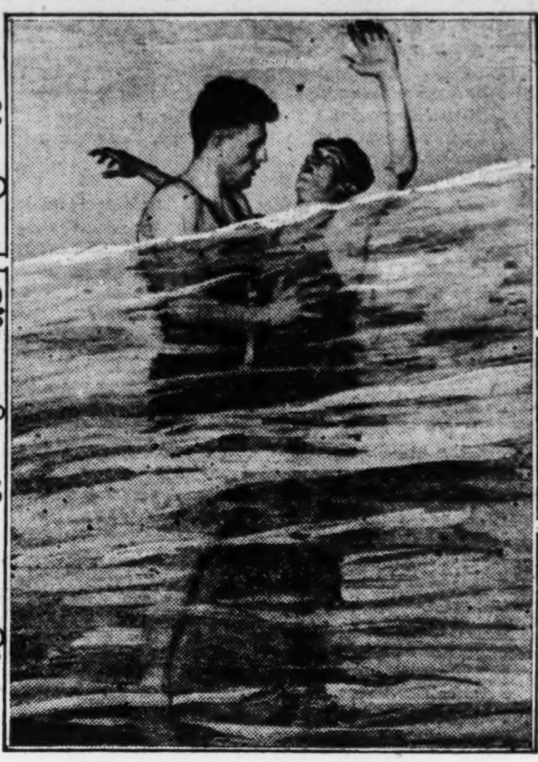
Airplanes bring a somewhat new complex. Men competent to pilot them oftentimes have wealth of their own, or, where wealth is lacking, are perhaps at least fortunate, in a large number of cases, in having a better education than most chauffeurs, and certainly better than the old-time coachman.

Does the decision rest, finally, on the personal equation—as so many agree is true with those of equal fortune and social standing? Or do earlier differing environments make an altogether different case when the poor young man leads the girl of wealth to the altar?

Why Even Good Swimmers, as Well as Novices, Drown



Safest position for giving aid in expelling water from air passages. Subject's head must be kept above the surface.



An equally effective method, but more risky to the rescuer; victim is liable to take a stranglehold on the samaritan who aims to save his life.

When the heart's action fails the body inclines forward and the swimmer apparently falls asleep. Many cases of this kind have been revived when the subjects were seemingly dead.

Most of the accidental drownings attributed by expert, who has just concluded investigation, to water in the windpipe—How this can be expelled almost instantly — Suggestions for aiding such distressed persons illustrated by the director of aquatics at the Missouri Athletic Association :: ::

EVERY summer, when the call of the lake and river is on, and suffocating denizens of the cities seek surcease from the heat-laden atmosphere of their homes and work places by responding to this lure, there are fatal accidents, and these continue to increase from year to year with startling regularity. Despite the growing tolls collected by rivers, lakes and pools, there is never any evidence of a scare sufficiently widespread to bring about a thoughtful study of the safety "do's" and "don't's" that should be first in the curriculum of every person who goes swimming or canoeing.

There seems to be a common practice among those who seek such recreation of putting the safety-first requirement at the last of the list, or effacing it entirely. "Have a good time and go the limit" seems to be the aim of all, and when the price is paid it happens often that there are good swimmers among the victims; they, too, must perish with those who are not skilled, just because they forget or ignore fundamental requirements.

The casualty list reported every Monday, following the Sunday rush, is forgotten ere the next week-end extends a beckoning hand, only to gather fresh victims. When those who are ignorant of the arts of swimming and canoeing take foolhardy chances in a stream like the Meramec, filled at times with treacherous eddies, which can only be negotiated by the most proficient, it is not surprising that there are fatalities, but it occasions wonder when, as happens often, the victim is an accomplished swimmer, schooled and practiced in all the strokes and technique of the professional. It is generally accepted that a first-class swimmer should be able to care for himself in the Meramec, certainly long enough to make the bank on either side.

That such accidents are directly due to carelessness has been often suspected and frequently asserted by those qualified to pass judgment in such matters.

And now comes Karl Bauer, swimming master and director of aquatic sports of the Missouri Athletic Association, who has been making an exhaustive investigation of a number of recent drownings, with the positive assurance that most of these fatalities would never have occurred had regard been paid to the precautions that should never be lost track of by even the best swimmers. His investigation has been applied particularly to the Meramec, as this stream seems to be the worst offender in the neighborhood of St. Louis.

He has discovered, among other things, that the old-time explanation of "cramps" should be given a place with other exploded theories and placed in the background. Just a little practical, common-sense caution and an ability to hold one's head in the face of what appears to be an imminent danger, are all that is needed, he says, to cut down the death rate and make the regular Monday list less to be dreaded, if not effacing it in its entirety. This is the conclusion of this professional athlete and swimmer, who holds high rank among the authorities on the alluring sports of the water.

"While it is possible," observes this master, "that a swimmer may get 'cramps' and find himself in a serious predicament, and no doubt some of the fatal cases start in this very way, my study of the causes has convinced me that the small quantity of water that finds its way into the breathing organs is the real cause of most of the casualties. If the swimmer just keeps command of his wits when he finds something wrong with his breathing, and feels his strength slipping, he can help himself by throwing his head above the surface and sharply pressing his stomach back with his hands. This can be done almost in an instant and the result desired is accomplished. The few drops are

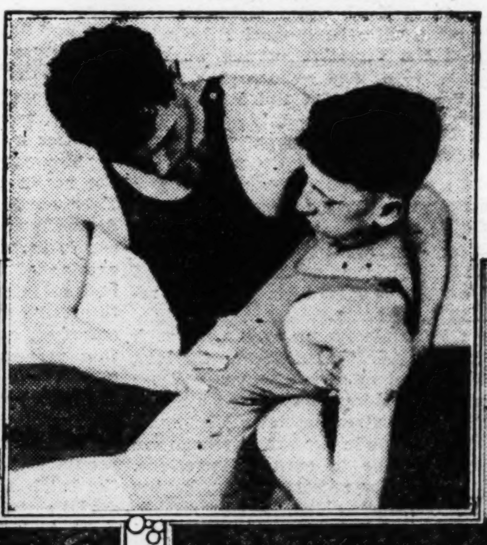
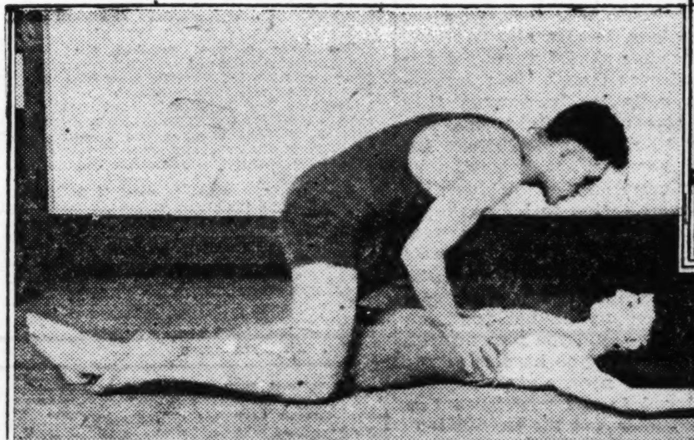
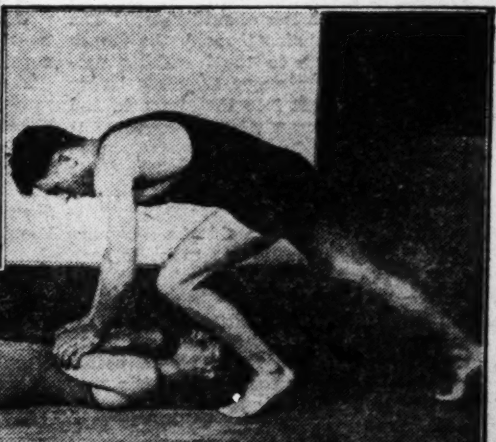
First aid when victim is taken ashore. When pressure is applied the nose and mouth should first be thoroughly cleansed of sand or other obstruction.



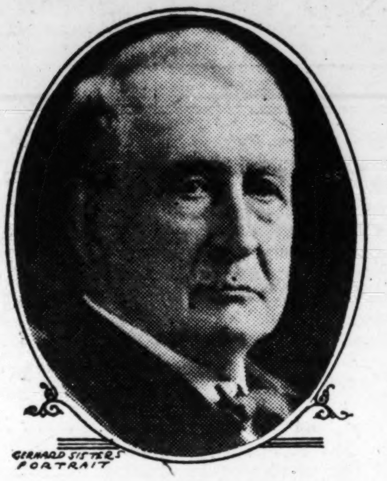


When breathing organs are cleared the patient is placed on his back with head raised.



The Silvester method of resuscitation. Care must be taken by operator to conserve his strength until help comes. This is correct position.

A FORMER PRINCE OF WALES AND A ST. LOUIS MAYOR'S WHITE KID GLOVES



Former Lieut.-Gov. Charles P. Johnson, who recalls the visit of Albert Edward, then Prince of Wales, to St. Louis in 1860.

Proposed visit of eldest son of George V in August recalls quaint nicety of etiquette which perplexed O. D. Filley in 1860, when future Edward VII was guest here—Arbiters of elegance at city hall exercised over problem as to whether burgomaster of virile West should don effete hand-coverings in honor of royal visitor—Picturesque reminiscences of surviving participant in festivities. : : : : : :

The Prince of Wales, who is expected to visit St. Louis in August. This picture was taken last spring.

THE announcement that Edward Albert, Prince of Wales and heir to the imperial scepter of Britain, will visit St. Louis soon, probably late in August, excites no tremors on the part of the city, for this will not be the first time that the metropolis of the Southwest has entertained a Prince of Wales. It has done so once before, and acquitted itself to the satisfaction of its royal visitor and also to its own,

Few survivors are now alive who remember the famous day and year when Albert Edward, afterwards to become one of the most significant rulers of his time under the titile of Edward VII, but then a rosy-cheeked undergraduate at Cambridge University—where he was studying chemistry in its industrial applications—arrived in St. Louis. One of the most widely traveled of Princes, he began his tours in youth, and in 1860 was sent on a visit to Canada and the United States. He journeyed under the incognito of "Lord Renfrew," but the disguise was easily penetrated.

He had landed at Philadelphia, proceeded to New York, visited West Point and then traveled through the West, visiting the principal cities. He arrived here from Alton on the evening of Wednesday, Sept. 26, 1860, on the steamboat City of Alton, considered a palatial craft in those days.

As the vessel reached the levee, it happened that the steamer Florence, bearing the Second U. S. Infantry Regiment, started for Omaha, and as it passed the City of Alton Col. Miles ordered the regimental band to parade upon the deck, where it played "Hail Columbia" and "God Save the Queen."

The Prince and his retinue took rooms at Barnum's Hotel, a structure at Second and Walnut streets, which has since been pulled down, and which was managed for years by a brother of the showman, Phineas T. Barnum. In the suite were the Duke of Newcastle, Major-General Robert Bruce, Lord Lyons, British Ambassador at Washington; Maj. Teasdale, Capt. Gray, Dr. Ackland and Messrs. Englehart, Jenner and Warne. The Prince himself rejoiced in the titles of Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, Duke of Saxony, Duke of Cornwall and Rothsay, Earl of Chester and Carpack, Baron Renfrew and Lord of the Isles.

Albert Edward, then Prince of Wales, as he appeared when he visited St. Louis in 1860, when he was 19. He afterwards became Edward VII and was the grandfather of the present Prince.

Out of respect for the visitor's incognito, no formal functions were held in his honor, but on the evening of his arrival Mayor O. D. Filley and Capt. Harper, president of the St. Louis Fair Association, called upon the Duke of Newcastle and arranged a program for the following day. It happened to be "Fair Week," an event which drew crowds to St. Louis from other parts of the State and from Illinois.

On the next morning the dignitaries of the city called at the hotel and were presented to the Prince. Many picturesque details of this function are recalled by the only surviving member of the delegation, former Lieutenant-Governor Charles P. Johnson, now in his eighty-fourth year. He was at the time City Attorney, having been elected the preceding year.

"I recall," says Gov. Johnson, "that Mayor Filley, who was a very plain and democratic man, was anxiously exercised over a fine point of etiquette. It was whether the chief executive of a sovereign American city should so far commit himself to aristocratic usages as to don, in deference to the future ruler of a monarchy, a pair of white kid gloves. The problem was debated pro and con by the arbiters of elegance at the city hall, then on Chestnut street. It was finally decided that not only should the Mayor equip himself with these effete coverings for the hands, but that all of the delegation should follow his example.

"So, on the morning of Sept. 27, when we lined up at the city hall to walk to Barnum's Hotel, all of us wore white kid gloves, and besides had decked ourselves out in our very best clothes. We had considerable trouble in persuading the Judge of the City Court, Thomas J. Daly, member of an influential family of politicians, to accompany us. The great Irish famine had occurred recently and Irish lecturers had circulated through the West, relating the woes of their country and soliciting subscriptions for the starving Irish. Daly, an Irishman, was loath to take part in a function in honor of the son of Queen Victoria, but was finally persuaded to attend. The argument with which he was won over was that he would not be present as an individual but as an official representing a city which could not be lax in offering hospitality to a stranger. This plea of hospitality was one which his Irish chivalry could not resist.

"So we started out, led by the Mayor. There were most of the members of the Board of Aldermen, the City Treasurer and Comptroller, the Hon. Edward Bates and several other officials. The Prince and his company of gentlemen received us in their suite, and we were presented one by one. I cannot remember what the Prince said to me as I was presented—it was some conventional salutation. He referred to his pleasure in visiting the United States, his particular pleasure in visiting St. Louis and his most particular pleasure in meeting ourselves. Yes, he was well schooled in what to say, for in the Duke of Newcastle he had a mentor who was a splendid instructor and diplomat.

"I examined the Prince with extreme curiosity. From books I had imbibed the most romantic notions of Kings and Princes, and I remember a slight feeling of disillusionment. I could not help admitting to myself, as I looked about on the company, that some of the young men in our party were quite as fine looking as he.

"Yet he was an attractive young man, of gracious and cordial manners and of modest bearing. He was slim and light of build, but with a look of health in his frame and ruddy cheeks. His face was very pleasant, but, of course, at that early age his features had not fully formed, and had no marked characteristics. He seemed about the same as one of our own agreeable, nice-looking boys.

"I do not think he shook hands with any of us, but acknowledged each presentation merely with a formal and gracious inclination. Thus we were relieved of the puzzle of what we should do about our gloves in case he proferred a handclasp.

"The Duke of Newcastle, an imposing figure, the very type of the high-born and educated Englishman, made a favorable impression upon us all. There was no ostentation at all during the reception, and after the presentations many of us had short chats with members of the Prince's suite. All of them, except the military officers, wore plain clothes, without medals or decorations. I was greatly struck by the simplicity of the occasion."

The narrator remained only a few minutes, and then withdrew to the street. He had an especial interest in watching the crowd; many of the more cautious citizens had misgivings as to whether some antagonism of willows, quite out of sight from the road," he suggested. "Perhaps you would go with me there?"

"What trail is that?"

"It leads to mines up the canon, my own included, but is not greatly traveled; the main trail is farther east."

She walked to the edge of the bridge, and permitted him to assist her down the steep bank. There was something of reserve about her manner, which prevented Westcott from feeling altogether at ease. In his own mind he began once more to question her purpose, to doubt the sincerity of her intentions. She appeared different from the frankly outspoken girl of the night before. Neither broke the silence between them until they reached the flat boulder and had found seats in the shelter of overhanging trees. She sat a moment, her eyes on the water, her cheeks shadowed by the wide brim of her hat, and Westcott noted the almost perfect contour of her face silhouetted against the green leaves. She turned toward him questioningly.

"I was very rude," she said, "but you will forgive me when I explain the cause. I had to act as I did or else lose my hold entirely on that man—you understand?"

"I do not need to understand," he answered gallantly. "It is enough that you say so."

"No, it is not enough. I value your friendship, Mr. Westcott, and I need your advice. I find myself confronting a very complicated case under unfamiliar conditions. I hardly know what to do."

"You may feel confidence in me."

"Oh, I do; indeed, you cannot realize how thoroughly I trust you," and impulsively she touched his hand with her own. "That is why I wrote you to meet me here—so I could tell you the whole story."

He waited, his eyes on her face.

"I received my letter this morning—the letter I told you I expected, containing my instructions. They—they relate to this man Ned Beaton and the woman he expects on this train."

"Your instructions?" he echoed doubtfully. "You mean you have been sent after these people on some criminal matter? You are a detective?"

There must have been a tone of distrust to his voice, for she turned and faced him defiantly.

"No, not that. Listen: I am a newspaper woman, a special writer on the New York Star." She paused, her cheeks flushing with nervousness. "It—it was very strange that I met you first of all, for—for it seems that the case is of personal interest to you."

"To me! Why, that is hardly likely, if it originated in New York."

"It did"—she drew in a sharp breath—"for it originated in the murder of Frederick Cavendish."

"The murder of Cavendish! He has been killed?"

"Yes; at least that is what everyone believes, except possibly one man—his former valet. His body was found lying dead on the floor of his private apartment, the door of his safe open, the money and papers missing. The Coroner's jury brought in a verdict of murder on these facts."

"And the murderer?"

"Left no clew; it was believed to be the work of a burglar."

"But when was this?"

She gave the date, and he studied over it.

"The same day he should have received my telegram," he said gravely. "That's why the poor fellow never answered." He turned to her suddenly. "But what became of my others," he asked, "and of all the letters I wrote?"

"That is exactly what I want to learn. They must have been delivered to his cousin, John Cavendish. I'll tell you all I know, and then perhaps, between us, we may be able to figure it out."

Briefly and clearly, she set before him the facts she and Willis had been able to gather—the will, the connection between Enright and John Cavendish, the quarrel between John and Frederick, the visit of John to Enright's office, the suspicion of Valois that the murdered man was not Cavendish, and, finally, the conversation overheard in Steinway's, the torn telegram and the meeting between Celeste La Rue and Enright.

When she had finished, Westcott sat, chin in hand, turning the evidence over in his mind. "Do you believe Frederick Cavendish is dead?" he asked suddenly.

"Yes."

Westcott struck his hand down on the rock, his eyes glowing dangerously.

"Well, I don't!" he exclaimed. "I believe he is alive! My theory is that this was all carefully arranged, but that circumstances compelled them to act quickly, and before they were entirely ready. Two unexpected occurrences hurried them into action."

She leaned forward, stirred by his earnestness.

"What?"

"The quarrel in the restaurant, leading to the making of the will," he answered gravely, "and my telegram. The two things fit together exactly. He must have received my first message that same night. In my judgment he was glad of some excuse to leave New York and determined to take the first train West. His quarrel with John, coupled with his disgust of the company he kept, caused him to draw up this will hurriedly. He left the club intending to pack up and take the first train."

"And was killed before he could do so?"

"Possibly; but if that dead man had no scar on his chest, he was not Frederick Cavendish; he was an impostor; some poor victim deliberately substituted because of his facial resemblance. Tell me, if it was Fred who was murdered, what became of the money he was known to have in his private safe? What became of the original copy of the will he had in his pocket when he left the club?"

She shook her head, convinced that his argument had force.

"I—I do not know."

"Yet these things are true, are they not? No money, no will was found. There is but one reason possible, unless others entered after the murder and stole these things. My belief is that Fred returned to his apartments, took what money he required, packed his valise and departed without a word to anyone. He often did things like that—hastily, on the spur of the moment."

"But what happened afterward?"

"The rest is all theory. I do not know, but I'll make a guess. In some way the conspirators learned what had occurred, but not in time to intercept his departure; yet they had everything ready for action, and realized this was the opportunity. Frederick had disappeared, leaving no trace behind; they could attend to him later, intercept him, perhaps—— Wait! Keep still. There comes the carriage from the train."

He drew her back into the denser undergrowth and they looked out through the leaves to where the road circled in toward the bridge. The hoofbeats of horses alone broke the silence.

CHAPTER XII.

VIEWED FROM BOTH SIDES.

THE team trotted on to the bridge, and then slowed down to a walk. Above the dull reverberation of hoofs the listeners below could hear the sound of voices, and an echo of rather forced laughter. Then the carriage emerged into full view. Besides the driver it contained three passengers—Beaton on the front seat, his face turned backward toward the two behind, a man and a woman. Westcott and Miss Donovan, peering through the screen of leaves, caught only a swift glimpse of their faces—the man middle-aged, inclined to stoutness, with an unusually red face, smoking viciously at a cigar, the woman young and decidedly blonde, with stray locks of hair blowing about her face, and a vivacious manner. The carriage rolled on to the smooth road and the driver touched up the horses with his whip, the lowered back curtain shutting off the view.

The girl seized Westcott's arm while she directed his gaze with her free hand. "Look!" she cried. "The woman is La Rue. And the man—the man is Enright! He is the lawyer I told you of, the one whose hand is not clear in this affair. And he is here!"

"Good!" Westcott exclaimed. "I'm glad they're both here. It means that there will be more to observe, and it means that there will be action—and that, too, quick! They are out here for a definite purpose which must soon be disclosed. And, Miss Donovan, I may be a little rock worn and a little bit out of style, but I think their presence here has something to do with the whereabouts of Fred Cavendish."

The girl looked straight into his honest, clear eyes. This remark opened a vast field for speculation. "You think he is alive then?" she said earnestly. "It is an interesting hypothesis. Perhaps—perhaps he may be in this neighborhood, even. And that," she added, her Irish eyes alight, "would be more interesting still."

"I hadn't finished my argument when that carriage appeared," Westcott answered. "Do you remember? Well, that might be the answer. Beaton has been in this neighborhood ever since about the time of that murder in New York. Nobody knows what his business is, but he is hand-in-glove with Bill Lacy and his gang. Lacy, besides running a saloon, pretends to be a mining speculator, but it is my opinion there is nothing he wouldn't do for money, if he considered the game safe. And now, with everything quiet in the East and no thought that there is any suspicion remaining, Beaton sends for the woman to join him here. Why? Because there is some job to be done too big for him to tackle alone. He's merely a gunman; he can do the strong-arm stuff, all right, but lacks brains. There is a problem out here requiring a little intellect; and it is my guess it is how to dispose of Cavendish until they can get away safely with the swag."

"Exactly! That would be a stake worth playing for."

"It certainly would; and, as I figure it out, that is their game. John Cavendish is merely a catspaw. Right now there is nothing for them to do but wait until the boy gets full possession of the property; then they'll put the screws on him good and proper. Meantime, Frederick must be kept out of sight—must remain dead."

"I wonder how this was ever planned out—if it be true?"

"It must have originated in some cunning, criminal brain," he admitted thoughtfully. "Not Beaton's surely; and, while she is probably much brighter, I am inclined to think the girl is merely acting under orders. There is somebody connected with this scheme higher up—a master criminal."

Miss Donovan was no fool; newspaper work had taught her to suspect men of intellect, and that nothing however wicked, low or depraved, was beyond them.

"Enright!" she said definitely. "Obviously now. I've thought so from the first. But always he worked so carefully, so guardedly, that sometimes I have doubted. But now I say without qualifications—Enright, smooth Mr. Enright, late of New York."

"That's my bet," Westcott agreed, his hand on her shoulder, forgetful of his intense earnestness; "Enright is the only one who could do it, and he has schemed so as to get John into a hole where he dare not emit a sound, no matter what they do to him. Do you see? If the boy breathes a suspicion he'll be indicted for murder. If they can only succeed in keeping Frederick safely out of sight until after court awards the property to his heir, they can milk John at their leisure. It's a lawyer's graft, all right."

"Then Frederick may be confined not far away?

"Likely enough; it's wild country. There are a hundred places within 50 miles where he might be hidden away for years. That is the job which was given to Beaton; he had the dirty work to perform, while the girl took care of John. I do not know how he did it—knockout drops, possibly, in a glass of beer; the blow of a fist on a train platform at night; a ride into the desert to look at something of interest—there are plenty of ways in which it could be quietly done by a man of Mr. Beaton's expert experience."

"Yes, but he does not know this country—if it was only New York now."

"But Bill Lacy does, and these fellows are well acquainted—friends apparently. Lacy and I are at daggers-points over a mining claim, and he believes my only chance is through the use of money advanced by Fred Cavendish. He'd ride through hell to lick me. Why, look here, Miss Donovan, when Bill Lacy had me stuck up against the wall last night at the hotel with a gun at my head, he lost his temper and began to taunt me about not getting any reply from my telegrams and letters. How did he know about them? Beaton must have told him. There's the answer; those fellows are in cahoots, and if Fred is actually alive, Bill Lacy knows where he is, and all about it."

She did not answer. Westcott's theory of the situation, his quick decision that Frederick Cavendish still lived, completely overturned her earlier conviction. Yet his argument did not seem unfair or his conclusion impossible. Her newspaper experience had made her aware that there is nothing in this world so strange as truth, and nothing to unusual as to be beyond the domain of crime.

"What do you think?" he asked quietly.

"Oh, I do not know; it all grows less comprehensible every moment. But whatever is true I cannot see that anything remains for us to do but wait and watch the actions of these people; they are certain to betray themselves. We have been here together now longer than we should, and I must return to the hotel."

"You expect Beaton to seek you?"

She smiled.

"He appeared very devoted, quite deeply interested; I hope it continues."

"So do I, now that I understand," earnestly. "Although I confess your intimacy was a shock to me this noon. Well, I am going to busy myself also and take a scouting trip to La Rosita."

"Is that Lacy's mine?"

"Yes; up the gulch here about two miles. I may pick up some information worth having. I am to see you again—alone?"

"We must have some means of communication; have you any suggestion?"

"Yes, but we'll take for our motto, 'Safety first.' We mustn't be seen together, or suspected in any way of being friends. The livery stable keeper has a boy about 12, who is quite devoted to me; a bright, trustworthy little fellow. He is about the hotel a good deal, and will bring me word from you any time. You need have no fear that I shall fail to respond to any message you send."

"I shall not doubt." She held out her hand frankly. "You believe in me now, Mr. Westcott?"

"Absolutely; indeed, I think I always have. That other thing hurt, yet I kept saying to myself, 'She had some good reason.'"

"Always think so, please, no matter what happens. I was nearly wild until I got the note to you; I was so afraid you would leave the hotel. We must trust each other."

He stood before her, his hat in hand, a strong, robust figure, his bronzed face clearly revealed; the sunlight making manifest the gray hair about his temples. To Miss Donovan he seemed all man, instinct with character and purpose, a virile type of the out-of-doors.

"To the death," and his lips and eyes smiled. "I believe in you utterly."

"Thank you. Good-by."

He watched her climb the bank and emerge upon the

CHAPTER X.

AT A NEW ANGLE.

THE knowledge that she was thus being spied upon gave the girl a sudden thrill, but not of fear. Instead it served to strengthen her resolve. There had been nothing in her valise to show who she really was, or why she was in Haskell, and consequently, if any vague suspicion had been aroused as to her presence in that community, the searchers had discovered no proof by this rifling of her bag.

She examined the room thoroughly, and glanced out into the still, deserted hall before bolting the door. The cracks in the wall were scarcely wide enough to be dangerous, yet she took the precaution of shrinking back into the darkest corner before opening her handbag and extracting the letter. It bore a typewritten address, with no suspicious characteristics about the envelope, the return card (typewritten also) being the home address of Farriss.

Farriss' letter contained nothing of interest except the fact that Enright had also left for the West. He instructed her to be on the lookout for him in Haskell, added a line or two of suggestions and ordered her to proceed with caution, as her quest might prove to be a dangerous one.

Miss Donovan tore the letter into small bits, wrapping the fragments in a handkerchief until she could throw them safely away. For some time she stood motionless at the window, looking out, but seeing nothing, her mind busy with the problem. She thought rapidly and clearly, more than ordinarily eager to solve this mystery. She was a newspaper woman, and the strange story in which she was involved appealed to her imagination, yet its appeal was far more effective in a purely personal way. It was Frederick Cavendish who had formerly been the partner of Jim Westcott. This was why no answer had come to the telegrams and letters the latter had sent East. What had become of them? Had they fallen into the hands of these others? Was this the true reason for Beaton's presence in Haskell, and also why the La Rue woman had been hastily sent for? She was not quite ready to accept that theory; the occasion hardly seemed important enough by itself alone.

Westcott's discovery was not even proven yet; its value had not been definitely established; it was of comparatively small importance contrasted with the known wealth left by the murdered man in the East. No, there must be some other cause for this sudden visit to Colorado. But what? She gave little credence to the vague suspicions advanced by Valois; that was altogether too impossible, too melodramatic, this thought of the substitution of some other body. It might be done, of course; indeed, she had a dim remembrance of having read of such a case some where, but there could be no object attained in this affair. Frederick dead, apparently killed by a burglar in his own apartments, was quite understandable; but kidnaped and still alive, another body substituted for his, resembling him sufficiently to be recognized as a fraud, would be a perfectly senseless procedure. No doubt there had been a crime committed, its object the attainment of money, but without question the cost had been the life of Frederick Cavendish.

Yet why was the man Beaton out here? For what purpose had he wired the La Rue woman to join him? And why had someone already entered her room and examined the contents of Stella Donovan's bag? To these queries there seemed to be no satisfactory answers. She must consult with Wescott, and await an opportunity to make the acquaintance of Celeste La Rue.

She was still there, her elbows on the window ledge, her face half concealed in the hollow of her hands, so lost in thought as to be obvious to the flight of time, when the harsh clang of the dinner bell from the porch below aroused her to a sense of hunger.

Ten minutes later Timmons, guiltless of any coat, but temporarily laying aside his pipe as a special act of courtesy, escorted her into the dining room and seated her at a table between the two front windows. Evidently this was reserved for the more distinguished guests—traveling men and those paying regular day rates—for its only other occupant was the individual in the check suit whom she vaguely remembered passing on the streets a few hours before.

The two long tables occupying the center of the room were already well filled with hungry men indiscriminately attired, not a few coatless and with rolled-up sleeves, as though they had hurried in from work at the first sound of the gong. These paid little attention to her entrance, except to stare curiously as she crossed the floor in Timmons' wake, and immediately afterward again devoted themselves noisily to their food.

A waitress, a red-haired, slovenly girl, with an impediment in her speech, took her order and disappeared in the direction of the kitchen, and Miss Donovan discreetly lifted her eyes to observe the man sitting nearly opposite. He was not prepossessing, yet she instantly recognized his type, and the probability that he would address her if the slightest opportunity occurred. Beneath lowered lashes she studied the fellow—the prominent jaw and thick lips shadowed by a closely trimmed moustache; the small eyes beneath overhanging brows; the heavy hair brushed back from a rather low forehead, and the short, stubby fingers grasping knife and fork.

If he is a drummer, she thought, his line would be whisky; then, almost as suddenly, it occured to her that perhaps he may prove to be Ned Beaton, and she drew in her breath sharply, determined to break the ice.

The waitress spread out the various dishes before her, and she glanced at them hopelessly. As she lifted her gaze she met that of her vis-a-vis fairly, and managed to smile.

"Some chuck," he said, in an attempt at good-fellowship, "but not to remind you of the Waldorf-Astoria."

"I should say not," she answered, testing one of her dishes cautiously. "But why associate me with New York?"

"You can't hide those things in a joint like this. Besides, that's the way you registered."

"Oh, so you've looked me up."

"Well, naturally," he explained, as though with a dim idea that an explanation was required, "I took a squint at the register; then I became more interested, for I'm from little old New York myself."

"You are? Selling goods on the road away out here?"

"Not me; that ain't my line at all. I've got a considerable mining deal on up the canon. I'll earn every dollar I'll make, though, eating this grub. Believe me, I'd like to be back by the Hudson right now."

"You've been here some time, then?"

"'Bout a month altogether, but not here in Haskell all that time. When did you leave New York?"

"Oh, more than a week ago," she lied gracefully.

"Then I suppose you haven't much late New York news? Nothing startling, I mean?"

"No; only what has been reported in the Western papers. I do not recall anything particularly interesting." She dropped her eyes to her plate and busied herself with a piece of tough beef. "The usual murders, of course, and things of that kind."

There was a moment's silence, then the man laughed as though slightly ill at ease.

"These fellows out here think they are a pretty tough lot," he said grimly, "but there are plenty of boys back on the East Side who could show them a few tricks. You know that part of the old town?"

"Not very well," she admitted with apparent regret, "but of course I read a good bit about it in the papers—the desperate characters, gunmen, and all those the police have so much trouble with. Are those stories really true?"

"There ain't a third of them ever told," and he leaned forward, quite at his ease again. "I have some business interest down that way, and so hear a good deal of what is going on at first hand. A New York gunman is so much worse than these amateurs out here there ain't no comparison. Why, I know a case"——

He stopped suddenly and took a sip of coffee.

"Tell me about it."

"'Tisn't anything to interest you, and, besides, it wouldn't sound well here at the table; some other time maybe, when you and I get better acquainted. What ever brought a girl like you down in here?"

She smiled.

"I'm a feature writer; I'm doing a series on the West for Scribbler's," she told him. "I visit New Mexico next, but I'm after something else besides a description of mountains and men; I'm also going to hunt up an old friend interested in mining, who told me if I ever got out this way I must look him up.

"I haven't seen him for years. He was continually singing this valley's charms, and so here I am. And I'm planning a great surprise on him. And, of course, I'm literally drinking in atmosphere—to say nothing of local color, which seems mostly to be men and revolvers."

The man opposite wet his lips with his tongue in an effort to speak, but the girl was busy eating and apparently paid no attention. Her calm indifference convinced him that her words were entirely innocent, and his audacity returned.

"Well," he ventured, "do you agree with this prospector friend?"

"The scenery, you mean?" glancing up brightly. "Why, it is wonderful, of course, and I am not at all sorry having made the journey, although it hardly compares with Tennessee Pass or Silver Plume. Still, you know, it will be pleasant to tell Mr. Cavendish when I go back that I was here."

He choked and his face seemed to whiten suddenly.

"Mr. Cavendish?" he gasped. "Of New York? Not the one that was killed?"

It was her turn to stare across the table, her eyes wide with horror, which she stimulated excellently.

"Killed! Has a man by that name been killed lately in New York? It was Frederick Cavendish I referred to." Her pretense was admirable.

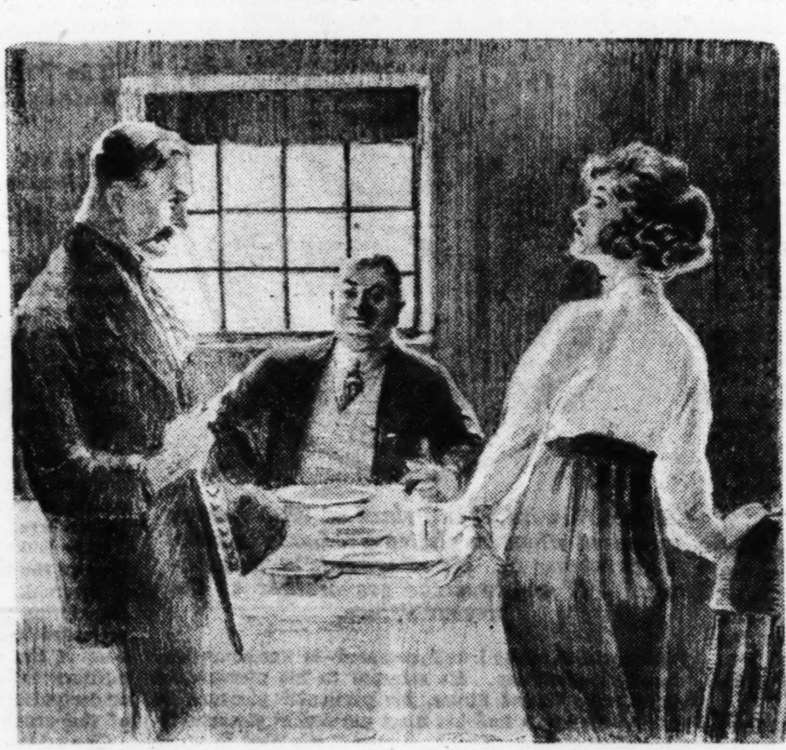
He was silent, realizing he had already said too much; the red had come back into his cheeks, but his hand shook as it rested clenched on the table.

"Tell me," she insisted, "has he been killed? How do you know.?"

Her earnestness, her perfect acting, convinced him. It was a mere coincidence, he thought, that his name should have cropped up between them, but, now that it had, he must explain the whole affair so as not to arouse suspicion. He cleared his throat and compelled his eyes to meet those across the table.

"Well, I don't know much about it, only what I read," he began, feeling his words. "But that was the name; I remembered it as soon as you spoke, and that the papers said he had been mining in Colorado before he came into money. He was found dead in his apartments, apparently killed by a burglar who had rifled his safe"

"Is this true? Why I have never heard? When did it happen?"



"Indeed! Well, permit me to say, Mr. Westcott, that I choose my own friends, and am perfectly competent to defend my character. This closes our acquaintanceship."

Mollie went for it and brought the pile to his room, lingering lovingly with him while he opened his letters.

"Ought to have had sense enough to do that from Gibraltar," he told himself. "There's Edith's letter; everything is in it, the whole thing settled one way or the other. And here I've been gadding about like a maniac."

He did not linger at all in New York, but hurried on to Boston, going straight from his steamer to the train, delighting his sister, as well as impressing his father by this unusual expedition. He arrived in the early evening and found them both at home. Almost before their greetings were said he drew Mollie to one side and demanded this letter. His sister stared at him. "Didn't you get it at your hotel?" she asked. "I sent it there—mailed it last night." Then, at the expression of his face she put her arms around him. "Oh, Billy!" she cried. "You poor boy! And I thought I was so clever to have it waiting in New York, so you'd get it without an hour's delay. I never dreamed you'd rush home without going there."

Billy bowed his head. The whole world seemed topsy-turvey. Everything, he felt, and everyone, had conspired against him.

"Well, never mind," he said, ungraciously. "Let me have what mail there is. I suppose there's some."

"Oh, yes, a heap."

Mollie went for it and brought the pile to his room, lingering lovingly with him while he opened his letters. He had glanced at all the addresses and postmarks before he opened any, but Mollie saw by his expression that he had not found what he wanted. He tore the envelopes listlessly, dropping bills on the floor, half-reading and tossing aside personal letters and invitations. Then he rose.

"You'll look after these, won't you?" he asked. "Just say 'no' to everything."

"But, Billy, where are you going?"

"New York," he announced briefly, and started downstairs. Mollie followed him, and while he was picking up his hat and handbag, hurriedly explained the situation to his father. That gentleman appeared in the hall just as his erratic son was opening the door leading to the street.

"Hold on, Billy," he called. "What nonsense is this? Can't you bear with us one night at least?"

"Sorry," said poor Billy, stopping reluctantly; and he added, vaguely, something that sounded like "'portant 'sness."

The elder Mr. Bailey uttered a sound expressing contempt. "Business!" he repeated, ironically. "Billy, you're acting like a fool."

"I know it," admitted Billy, ignobly, and closed the door.

When he reached his hotel in New York he checked the buoyant greeting of the night clerk by demanding his mail.

"Everything gone on to Boston, Mr. Bailey," said that unfortunate blithely. "We've forwarded all your mail since you went away."

His victim glared at him. "But the letter—the things that came yesterday from Boston," he stammered, "to catch me here. How about them?"

"Sorry," said the clerk. "But, you see, we didn't know. No instructions, and we don't stop to examine postmarks. So if anything came from Boston it went right back to Boston." He smiled happily upon Bailey, and received one of the surprises of his life.

"Damn you!" said that young man, intensely, and retired to his own rooms.

Rising in the morning and glancing out of the windows as he moodily dressed, he was almost surprised to find that the portion of the outer world around his hotel seemed much as he had left it, little more than a month ago. It had been May then. It was now June, but there was the same deceptive tang in the air, the same mocking sunshine, and, yes, somewhere near by, an organ man was making a street organ senilely betray its age.

After breakfast he strolled out on the avenue, with some vague notion of looking up someone who knew something. His mind, dazed by recurrent disappointments, was apparently failing him, too. And then, as if fate had wearied of him as its top, it tossed a favor his way.

Before he had gone three blocks from his hotel he met Mr. Horace White, unimportant in himself, but great in the eyes of Billy Bailey as the uncle of Edith. The fervor of the greeting Mr. White received was so great that the phlegmatic gentleman was unable to conceal his surprise. He was hurrying to his office, and had stopped reluctantly, obviously unable to see why he should waste precious business time in conversation with Billy Bailey. But after a sharp glance at the young man's face his expression changed.

"What's the matter with you, Billy?" he asked kindly. "You're looking seedy."

Billy had entered upon the jocund day enveloped in wretchedness so complete that it scorned concealment. It was from the depths of this that he answered.

"I guess you know what's the matter," he muttered.

The other looked at him again, thoughtfully. Then he yielded to a rare impulse of friendly sympathy.

"Edith, I suppose?" he asked.

"Of course."

Edith's uncle glanced at his watch, then snapped it shut with a movement of decision. He could give this young man another minute.

"Sorry," he said. "But since you feel that way, why don't you fix things up?"

Billy uttered a laugh that he intended should sound sardonic, but which merely sounded pitiful.

"Takes two," he explained. Then, with a wild impulse of hope: "Would Edith" ——

Horace White was a busy man, with no time for beating about the bush.

"Would she?" he echoed. "You bet she would. Been eating her heart out ever since the quarrel. Fix it up. Good-by."

He was off, but Billy pursued him.

"Here, wait a minute," he begged. "Where can I write her?"

The other paused. "Write the devil," he exclaimed. "Go and see her. That's the best way."

"But where, where?" cried poor Billy, grasping his elbow. "I've been chasing her and her mother all over Europe. Where is she now?"

Horace White turned and stared at him. Then he seemed to understand.

"Why, you young idiot," he said almost affectionately, "it's my daughter that's in Europe with Mrs. White. At the last minute Edith wouldn't go. She's been right around the corner for a month, ostensibly keeping house for me, but really waiting for you to call!"

When Prince Came to St. Louis

might not be shown to the visitor, for the memory of the Irish famine still existed.

"There was a great crowd along the streets," Gov. Johnson continued, "not such throngs, of course, as we have seen recently, but still a big demonstration for that time. It was a gala day, for it was Fair Week, and the town was filled with visitors. The river element was very strong here then; the river men were often rather rough characters and terribly outspoken. From them, it was thought, any disturbance would probably rise, if any occurred. The city was very different from what it is today. It ran wide open, and I remember that there was a row of gambling houses operating full blast along Fourth street.

"Our most imposing equipage in those days was a huge carriage, the pride of Jesse Arnot, who ran a famous livery stable on Chestnut street. It was brought forth only on state occasions, and made a regal spectacle, with its plumes and its four splendid black horses. This was the vehicle in which the Prince rode, and the reins were handled by no other than Arnot himself—one potentate paying his respects to another.

"I was watching mostly to see whether any ebullition might break forth, and kept an eye on several of our Irish fellow citizens whom I saw in the throng. To my relief, these gentlemen applauded the Prince as much as anyone; in them the spirit of hospitality overbore for the time any feeling of national resentment. There was not an untoward incident during the Prince's visit. Everybody regarded it as quite an important event for the future King of England to be among us. The visit passed with everyone well pleased."

In the cavalcade the Prince and his suite were attended by the following St. Louisans, also in carriages: Col. John O'Fallon, Henry Shaw, James E. Yeatman, Col. Robert Campbell and the Hon. Edward Bates. If the precedent set by the then Prince of Wales is followed by his grandson, Prince Edward Albert, there will be a procession which will afford everyone an opportunity to gaze upon the future ruler. For the route followed on that morning in 1860 covered a great part of the city as it then stood: From Second street on Walnut to Fifth (Broadway), north to Market, Market to Fourth, Fourth to Olive, Olive to Main, Main to Washington avenue, Washington to Nineteenth, Nineteenth to Lucas place, Lucas place to Fourteenth, Fourteenth to Olive, Olive to Garrison, Garrison to Morgan, and thence to the fairgrounds, which the party reached at about 1 p. m.

The carriages were drawn quietly into the amphitheater, and the party, alighting, was received in the pagoda by the directors of the Fair Association. Capt. Harper, the president, welcomed them as follows:

"Sir, Your Royal Highness, Your Grace, the Duke of Newcastle, and gentlemen all: I welcome you to our fairgrounds, and, believe me, it is one of the happiest events in my life that I, as representative of this association, can extend to you a greeting and welcome on this occassion." The Prince replied in a few words of acknowledgment.

Then there was a hearty demonstration from those present, the ladies waving handkerchiefs, the men cheering and a band playing "God Save the Queen" and "Yankee Doodle." Afterwards the Prince was escorted to the lunchroom, where, as a special mark of esteem, he was regaled with delicacies peculiar to the West. The menu included buffalo tongue, quail and prairie chicken, which the Prince tasted with imperturbable urbanity, as he did also the Missouri wines offered to him. Finally, ascending to the second story of the pagoda, he watched a race with such relish as predicted his later eminent connoisseurship of horseflesh. He spent the night at the hotel, and departed the next morning, Friday, Sept. 28, for Cincinnati.

After leaving America, the Prince returned to Cambridge University, where he completed the course in the following year. He succeeded to the throne in 1901, and in his short reign of nine years succeeded in impressing his personality upon the affairs of the British empire to an extent beyond most British sovereigns of recent times. His genius for statecraft is credited with the creation of the Anglo-French and Anglo-Russian Entente, without which Europe would have been lost when Germany made its onslaught on civilization in 1914. The King was one of the few men who thoroughly understood his nephew, the former Emperor of Germany, for whom Edward entertained the most cordial detestation.

He was succeeded by his second son, the present King George V. The latter's eldest son, Prince Edward Albert, is now, 59 years later, to repeat the visit made to St. Louis by his grandfather. The present Prince of Wales is six years older than his grandfather was when he came to St. Louis, and has been matured beyond his years by the ordeal through which England has passed. But from all accounts he has been as well trained in the secret of pleasing as was the Prince of Wales of the 'sixties.

"It must have been a month ago."

"But how did you learn these particulars? You have been West that length of time."

"I read about it in a New York paper," he answered a trifle sullenly. "It was sent to me."

She sat with her chin in the palm of one hand, watching him from beneath the shadow of lowered lashes, but his eyes were bent downward at his plate.

"Are you through?" he questioned suddenly.

"Yes; this—this awful news has robbed me of all appetite."

Neither had noticed Westcott as he entered the room, but his first glance about revealed their presence, and without an instant of hesitancy the big miner crossed the room and approached the table where the two were sitting.

Beaton, as though anticipating trouble, rose to his feet, but Westcott merely drew back a vacant chair and seated himself, his eyes ignoring the presence of the man and seeking the uplifted face of the girl questioningly.

"I hope I do not interrupt," he said pleasantly. "I had reason to suppose you were unacquainted with Mr. Beaton here."

"What reason?" her surprised tone slightly indignant.

"I believe the gentleman so informed me. It chanced that we had a slight controversy last night."

"Over me?"

"Over his curiosity regarding you—who you were; your presence here."

She pushed back her chair and stood up.

"A natural curiosity enough, surely. And you felt important enough to rebuke him on my behalf? Is that what I am to understand?"

"Why," he explained, startled by her strange manner, "I informed him that it was none of his business, and that if he mentioned your name in my presence again there was liable to be trouble. We scrapped it out."

"You—you scrapped it out? You mean there was a fight over me—a barroom squabble over me?"

"Not in a barroom; in the hotel office. Beaton drew a gun and I had to slug him."

"But the affair originated over me—my name was brought into it?" she insisted. "You actually threatened him because he asked about me?"

"I reckon that was about how it started," he admitted slowly. "You see, I rather thought I was a sorter friend of yours, and that I ought to stand up for you."

"Did—did this man say anything against me?"

"No—not exactly; he—he just asked questions."

Her eyes were scornful, angry.

"Indeed! Well, permit me to say, Mr. Westcott, that I choose my own friends, and am perfectly competent to defend my own character. This closes our acquaintanceship."

She moved about the end of the table, and touched Beaton's sleeve with her fingers.

"Would you escort me to the foot of the stairs?" she asked, her voice softening. "We will leave this belligerent individual to his own company."

Neither of them glanced back, the girl still speaking as they disappeared, but Westcott turned in his chair to watch them cross the room. He had no sense of anger, no desire to retaliate, but he felt dazed and as though the whole world was suddenly turned upside down. So she really belonged with that outfit, did she? Well, it was a good joke on him.

The waitress spoke to him twice before he was sufficiently aroused to give his order.

CHAPTER XI.

DEAD OR ALIVE.

BEFORE Westcott finished his meal his mood had changed to tolerant amusement. That the girl had deliberately deceived him was plain enough, revealed now in both her manner and words. What her true purpose might have been in apparently seeking his friendship at first could not now he conjectured—indeed, made little difference—but it was clear enough she really belonged to the Lacy crowd and had no more use for him.

Westcott was sorry for the turn things had taken; he made no attempt to disguise this from his own mind. He was beginning to like Miss Donovan, to think about her, to feel a distinct interest in her. Some way she had impressed him deeply as a young woman of character and unusual charm—a breath out of the East to arouse his imagination and memory. He had begun to hope for a friendship which would endure, and now—the house of cards fell at a single touch.

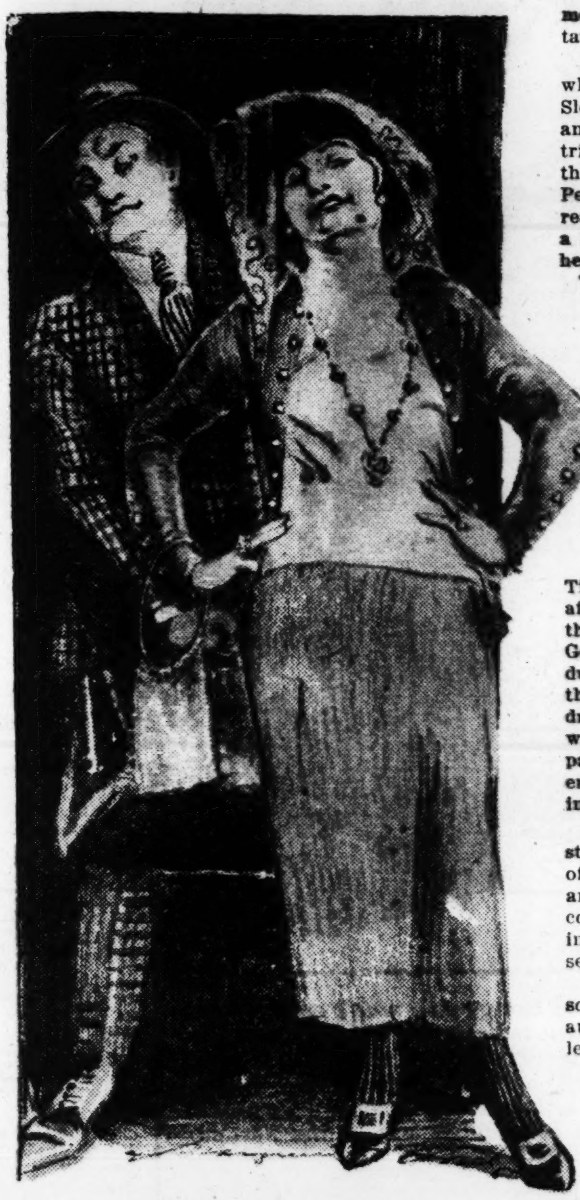
He could scarcely comprehend the situation; how a girl of her apparent refinement and gentility could ever be attracted by a rough, brutal type such as Ned Beaton so evidently was. Why, the man's lack of taste in dress, the expression of his face, his ungrammatical language, stamped him as belonging to a distinctly lower order.

There surely must be some other cause drawing them together. Yet, whatever it was, there was no doubt but that he had been very properly snubbed. Her words stung; yet it was the manner in which she had looked at him and swept past at Beaton's side which hurt the most. Oh, well, an enemy more or less made small difference in his life; he would laugh at it and forget. She had made her choice of companionship, and it was just as well, probably, that the affair had gone no further before he discovered the sort of girl she really was.

Westcott reached this decision and the outer office at the same time, exchanged a careless word or two with Timmons and finally purchased a cigar and retired to one corner to peruse an old newspaper. It was not so easy to read, however, for the news failed to interest or keep his mind from wandering widely. Soon he was staring out through the unwashed window, oblivious to everything but his own thoughts.

Who was this Beaton, and what connection could he have with Bill Lacy's gang? The row last night had revealed a mutual interest between the men, but what was its nature? To Westcott's judgment the burly New Yorker did not resemble an Eastern speculator in mining property; he was far more typical of a Bowery rough—a tool rather than an employer in the commission of crime.

Lacy's purpose he believed he understood to some extent—a claim that it was an extension of the La Rosita vein which Westcott had tapped in his recent discovery. There had been bad blood between them for some time—threats of violence and rumors of lawsuits. No doubt Lacy would resort to any dirty trick to get him out of the way and gain control of the property. But he had no personal fear of Lacy; not, at least, if he could once get the backing of Cavendish's money. But these other people—Beaton, Miss Donovan, and still another excepted to arrive soon from the East—how were they connected with the deal?



"Say, do I actually have to wash in that tin basin? Lord! I didn't suppose there was such a place in the world."

How were they involved in the controversy? Had Lacy organized a company and got hold of some money in New York? It might be possible, and yet neither the man nor the woman impressed him as financiers risking fortunes in the exploitation of mines. The problem was unsolvable; the only thing he could do was guard his property and wait until they showed their hand. If he could only hear from Fred Cavendish——

He was so deeply engrossed in these thoughts, the smoked-out cigar substituted by a pipe, that he remained unaware that Timmons had left the office, or that the Chinese man-of-all-work had silently tiptoed down the stairs and was cautiously peering in through the open doorway to make sure the coast was clear. Assured as to this, the wily Oriental sidled noiselessly across the floor and paused beside him.

"Zis Meester Vest-c-ott?" he asked softly.

The miner looked up at the implacable face in surprise, lowering his feet.

"That's my name, John; what is it?"

The messenger shook a folded paper out of his sleeve, thrust it into the other's hand hastily, and, with a hurried glance about, started to glide away as silently as he had come. Westcott stared at the note, which was unaddressed.

"Sure this is for me, John?"

"Ally same sure—for Meester Vest-c-ott."

He vanished into the dark hall, and there was the faint clatter of his shoes on the stairs.

Westcott, fully aroused, cast his glance about the deserted room, and unfolded the paper which had been left in his fingers. His eyes took in the few penciled words instantly.

"Do not be angry. I had the best of reasons. Meet me near the lower bridge at 3 o'clock. Very important. S. D."

He read the lines over again, his lips emitting a low whistle, his eyes darkening with sudden appreciation. Slowly he tore the paper into strips, crossed the room, and flung the remnants into the stove. It had been a trick, then, a bit of play-acting! But had it? Was not this rather the real fraud—this sudden change of heart? Perhaps something had occurred to cause the girl to realize that she had made a mistake; to awaken her to a knowledge that a pretense at friendship would serve her cause better than an open break.

The note might have a sinister purpose; be intended to deceive. No! He would not believe this. All his old lurking faith in her came back in a flash of revelation. He would continue to believe in her, trust her, feel that some worthy purpose had influenced her strange action. And, above all, he would be at the lower bridge on the hour set. He was at the desk when Timmons returned.

"What do I owe you, old man?"

He paid the bill jokingly and in the best of humor, careful to tell the proprietor he was leaving for his mine and might not return for several days. He possessed confidence that Timmons would make no secret of this in Haskell after his departure. He was glad to notice that Beaton observed him as he passed the Good Luck Saloon and went tramping down the dusty road. He never glanced back until he turned into the north trail at the edge of town; there the path dropped suddenly toward the bed of the creek, and he was concealed from view. In the rock shadow he paused, chuckling grimly as he observed the New Yorker cross the street to the hotel, hastening, no doubt, to interview Timmons.

There was a crooked trail along the bank of the stream which joined the main road at the west end of the lower bridge. It led up the canon amid rocks and cedars, causing it to assume a strangely tortuous course, and its lower end was shadowed by overhanging willows. Along this Westcott lingered at the hour set, watchful of the road leading toward Haskell.

The only carriage belonging to the town livery passed soon after his arrival, evidently bound for the station, and from his covert he recognized Beaton lolling carelessly in the back seat. This must mean that the man expected arrivals on the afternoon train, important arrivals whom he desired to honor. There was no sign, however, of Miss Donovan; the time was up, yet with no evidence of her approach.

Westcott waited patiently, arguing to himself that her delay might be caused by her wish to get Beaton well out of the way before she ventured to leave the hotel. At last he strode down the path to the bridge, and saw her leaning over the rail, staring at the ripples below.

"Why," he exclaimed in surprise, "how long have you been here?"

"Several minutes," and she turned to face him. "I waited until the carriage passed before coming onto the bridge. I took the footpath from the hotel."

"Oh, I see—from the other way. I was waiting in the trail below. You saw who was in the carriage?"

"Beaton—yes," quietly. "He expects some friends, and wishes me to meet them—Eastern people, you know."

Her indifference ruffled his temper, aroused his suspicion of her purpose.

"You sent for me; there is some explanation, no doubt?"

The lady smiled, lifting her eyes to his face.

"There is," she answered. "A perfectly satisfactory one, I believe; but this place is too prominent, as I have a rather long story to tell. Beaton and his friends will be returning soon."

"There is a rock seat below, just beyond the clump

A Game of Tag

—By—

ELIZABETH JORDAN

THEY had parted forever. That fact, the one certainty in a most uncertain world, filled "Billy" Bailey's consciousness.

To him, at 23, both life and love had lost their glamour—that is, if she had really thrown him over. All that lay before him now was work, and work, some way, had never especially appealed to him, probably because he had never given it a fair chance. Even at this moment, when it offered its bony breast as a refuge from his misery, he regarded it without enthusiasm. There was no hurry about going to work. First, he would see Edith again, make one last appeal, grovel if she wished—and perhaps she would give him another chance.

His black depression lifted a little as he made the decision, and he crossed the room to his desk with a swing and vigor in his movements which they had wholly lacked during the past week. He even whistled softly as he selected a pen and began his note, begging for an interview.

It was short, but every word was a tribute to the glory of Edith, and an admission of the utter insignificance of everything in himself save his great love for her. He sealed the letter, called a messenger boy and sent it to her at once. Then, with hope once more at his elbow, he went down to the hotel dining room and ate a highly satisfactory luncheon.

His sense of well-being, however, was rudely jarred by the phenomenally prompt return of the messenger, who, having been earnestly charged to hurry and to bring back the answer, had done his best according to his opportunities. He was back, but he was still conspicuously grasping Billy's note, which bore evidences of having passed through several hands.

"Nothin' doin'," he announced, defensively.

Stunned, young Bailey regarded the letter, then addressed him as man to man.

"She didn't send it back?" he stammered.

"Naw. She wasn't there. She's gone to Europe."

"Gone to Europe!"

For an instant Billy could not take it in. He had imagined everything but this.

"How do you know?" he added, quickly. "Who told you so?"

"House all boarded up. Saw the caretaker. And, say, you said you'd gimme a dollar if I hustled."

Billy gave him the dollar, got rid of him and thought hard.

He and Edith had hosts of friends in common. Undoubtedly they had been restrained from telling him of her departure by what they considered the most delicate tact. Quietly but fervently he confided his opinion of them and their tact to the unresponsive walls of his room. Then hurrying to the telephone, he called up one of them, and, fortunately, found her at home. Breathlessly he poured forth his story, and, as she listened, the heart of Mrs. Mayhew softened.

"I'm so sorry, Billy," she said. "I supposed, of course, you knew. Edith and her mother sailed for Triest yesterday. No, I don't know how long they'll be gone. They didn't say. It was all arranged so hastily that I fancy they didn't make any definite plans beyond just going over. But they're going straight from Triest to Vienna, and I heard Edith say something abount Hungary and Rumania and Greece."

Billy listened in sick dismay. It was worse than he had expected, for this was in the spring of 1913, and in the days before the engagement Edith and her mother had thought nothing of remaining in Europe a year at a time.

"Does anyone else know any more about it than you do?" he bluntly asked Mrs. Mayhew.

She was sure no one else did.

"Why don't you foolish children kiss and make up?" she asked kindly. "I thought Edith looked wretchedly unhappy the other night."

"Oh, did she?" Billy grinned widely over these sad tidings. Edith jubilantly sailing toward the Adriatic was a picture he could not have contemplated. But Edith hastening to the world's end to deaden the dull ache of a broken heart was a wholly reassuring vision. At the same time he did not intend to let her suffer a moment longer than was necessary.

He was a singularly energetic young person, and, once resolved to "get Edith back," as he expressed it to himself, he lost no time in pursuing that laudable purpose. He counted his ready money, cashed a check for more, and sailed for Europe the next morning. It seemed safe to assume that, taking the leisurely voyage of the southern route, they would be in Vienna in two weeks.

"I'll take the northern route and beat them to it," Billy told himself, elegantly.

But he had failed to take into consideration the fickle nature of women. On the second day of his voyage he received a wireless message from Mrs. Mayhew.

"Just learned they decided to leave ship at Gibraltar and travel in Spain. First hotel, Reina Christina, Algeciras."

Mr. Bailey read the message and then hastened to a lonely spot on the upper deck, where, untrammeled by convention, he could express his feelings to the unsympathetic sea. The expedient of making the captain change the ship's course at once occurred to him, but was dismissed as he remembered that other desperate men had attempted this in vain. A wild desire to swim back he wrestled with and conquered. But these and similar mental struggles so preyed upon his mind that before he reached Cherbourg the entire ship's company were discussing the metamorphosis of a sunny-natured young man into an embittered being whom none cared to approach more than once.

Taking into consideration the admitted uncertainties of travel by airships and automobiles, young Bailey decided that the safest and quickest method was to travel by rail. As long as his journeying was confined to France, this theory was quite correct, but when he reached Spanish soil the difficulty of getting anywhere by any means seemed at times so insuperable that even the intrepid lover almost gave up hope.

All trains, leaving for any point, seemed to start at some gray, mysterious hour toward dawn. Like sluggish serpents the engines crawled over the Spanish landscape, pausing whenever they reached a particularly bleak and desolate "junction," to let their passengers linger a few hours on the sun-baked platform of some primitive station.

By night a wonderful moon swam in the heavens, and the love songs of nightingales came pregnantly from olive trees, for it was still spring, though it began to seem to the unhappy young man that he had been traveling for months. But at last he reached Gibraltar, and with leaping heart embarked in the little packet boat that plies between "the Rock" and Algeciras.

The dignified young English woman in the office of the Reina Christina was pained by the abruptness of his manner.

"Here," cried the young man, irritably. "Their names wouldn't be registered last month. Look at this week's entries. They must have arrived two or three days ago."

Thus guided, the slow fingers of the clerk moved toward the more recent registrations. "It mightn't be Mrs. Henry White of Albany?" she suggested. "She had been there four days ago. No?"

"Might this be the lady?" she then asked, timidly. It might be, and, indeed, it was. With difficulty the young person recalled her. According to the records (and this required another search), Mrs. White and Miss White had remained only until morning. The clerk's manner was becoming weary. She had not the remotest idea where they had gone next; and now there was a distinct edge to her voice.

The porter who attended to the luggage of his friends might remember to what destination he had booked it. She summoned that excellent and intelligent employe, explained the gentleman's wishes, and the whole situation cleared almost miraculously. The porter's memory, stimulated into hectic activity by the gift of 5 pesos, recalled facts in almost embarrassing detail.

He had attended to everything for the ladies, and had booked their luggage through to Seville; it was only nine hours to Seville; one ought to reach there inside of two days. They were probably just arriving. Following them, the gentleman could leave on the earliest boat in the morning—there was, alas! no other boat tonight. And, yes, sir; thank you again, sir, Billy should be awakened at dawn and presumably—so great was the porter's zeal—carried on board.

Mr. Bailey retired gloomily to his room. It opened on the famous garden, and there was a balcony outside of one window, on which, until midnight, he lounged and smoked. To be here with Edith would have been a joy he hardly dared to picture to himself. To be here without her was an irony which turned the incredible beauty of the night and the place into mockery. Yet it bore its reassuring message, and insensibly he felt calmed and soothed by it. Surely, somehow, in a world as wonderful as this, things must come out right.

He reached Seville two days later, and went at once to the principal hotel, at which he expected to find Mrs. White and Edith. They were not there; but awaiting him, having traveled with something approaching speed via Spain's "fast mail," was a letter forwarded by the attentive porter at Algeciras. It was from his sister, and had been at the Reina Christina when he arrived, but the exacting duties he had put upon the young lady at the desk, he gathered, had driven it from her mind.

Without much eagerness Billy opened the envelope, then a sentence claiming his attention, reread it with shining eyes.

"The day after you sailed a letter came to your hotel addressed in Edith's handwriting. The clerk remailed it to father, as you had left no other instructions. I'm not at all sure where you're going to be, so I'm sending this note on a chance. But I don't want to risk remailing Edith's letter until I hear from you. It may be important. So I'll hold it here."

A letter from Edith—that was news. Should he cable his sister to read it and cable the contents? No. It might be merely another "farewell forever," and Mollie, he remembered, had a confoundely keen sense of humor. Besides, he'd see Edith herself in a day or two more, and she would tell him what was in the letter.

But two days passed and he found no trace of the Whites in Seville. It seemed obvious that they had changed their plans and not come there at all. In his inquiries he was greatly handicapped by his ignorance of Spanish and by the national Spanish ignorance of any other tongue. They might yet come, so he dared not leave. They might have gone straight on to Madrid, so he was afraid to remain.

He waited, however, but on the edge of his nerves, whiling away his time by cabling inquiries to Mrs. Mayhew. At the end of his fifth day in Seville he received a cable from her. It read:

"Hear they abandoned Spanish tour and sailed from Gibraltar to Naples on seventeenth."

Billy ground his teeth. The seventeenth! That was the day he had started from Algeciras for Seville. And even as he started Mrs. White and Edith had been just 20 minutes away from him, comfortably taking ship at Gibraltar. He went to Gibraltar in a desperate frame of mind. He would take the next boat that sailed from there. If its destination happened to be Naples, all right. He would go to Naples. If, on the other hand, it was sailing for New York, he would take it and go home. He was sick of this wild-goose chase.

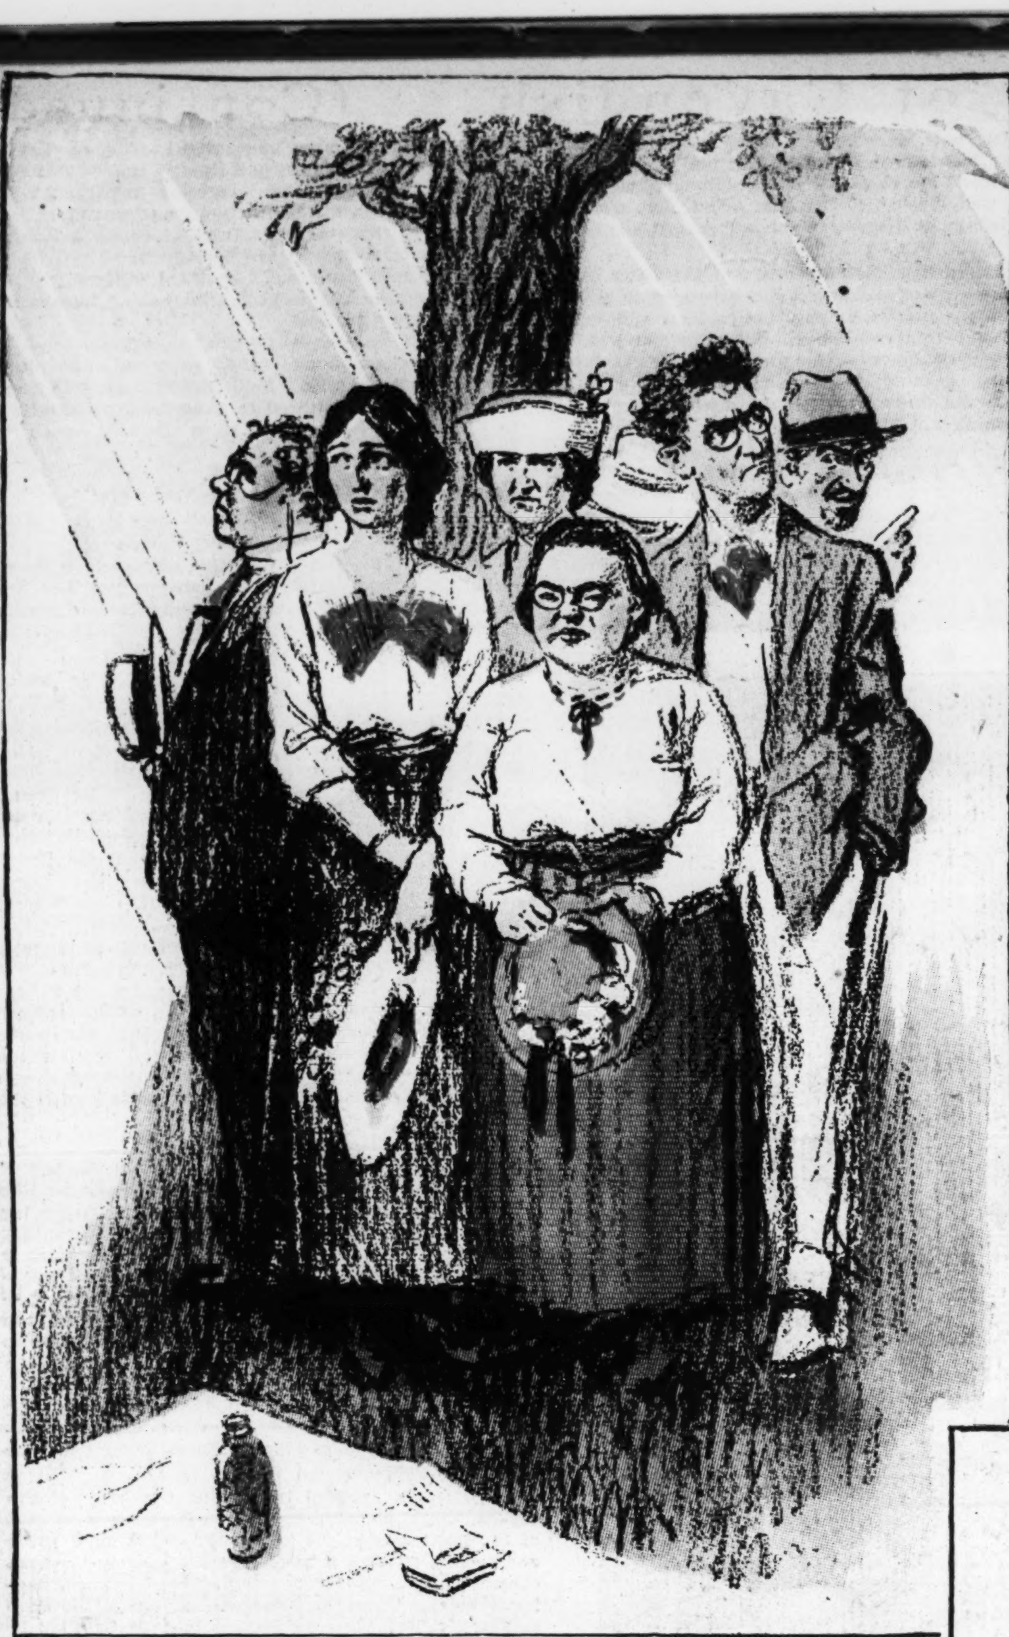
By a stroke of luck—the first he had experienced since he left America, he told himself bitterly—a steamer stopped at Gibraltar the day he arrived there. Within two hours he was sailing toward Naples. He knew Edith's favorite haunts in Italy. She would stay in Naples a few days, he thought, at Bertolini's. Then she would surely go to Amalfi, stopping for a day or two, perhaps, at Sorrento. It seemed certain that in or near Naples he would catch up with her at last—and where could there be a more perfect spot to meet Edith again than on the Capuchin terrace at Amalfi?

At Bertolini's Billy was greeted with seeming rapture by the head clerk, who remembered his visit there the year before. But the face of this gentleman clouded with a deep sorrow when he had heard the young man's eager questions. Was Mrs. James Frederick White in the hotel now, or had she been here? Alas! no.

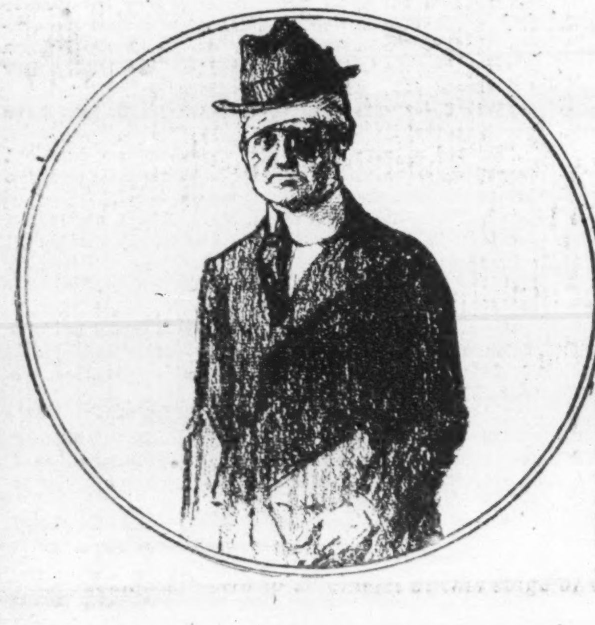
Slowly, heavily, Billy turned away. Then he went down to the steamship office and took passage on the first ship home.

BOLSHEVIK REACTIONS

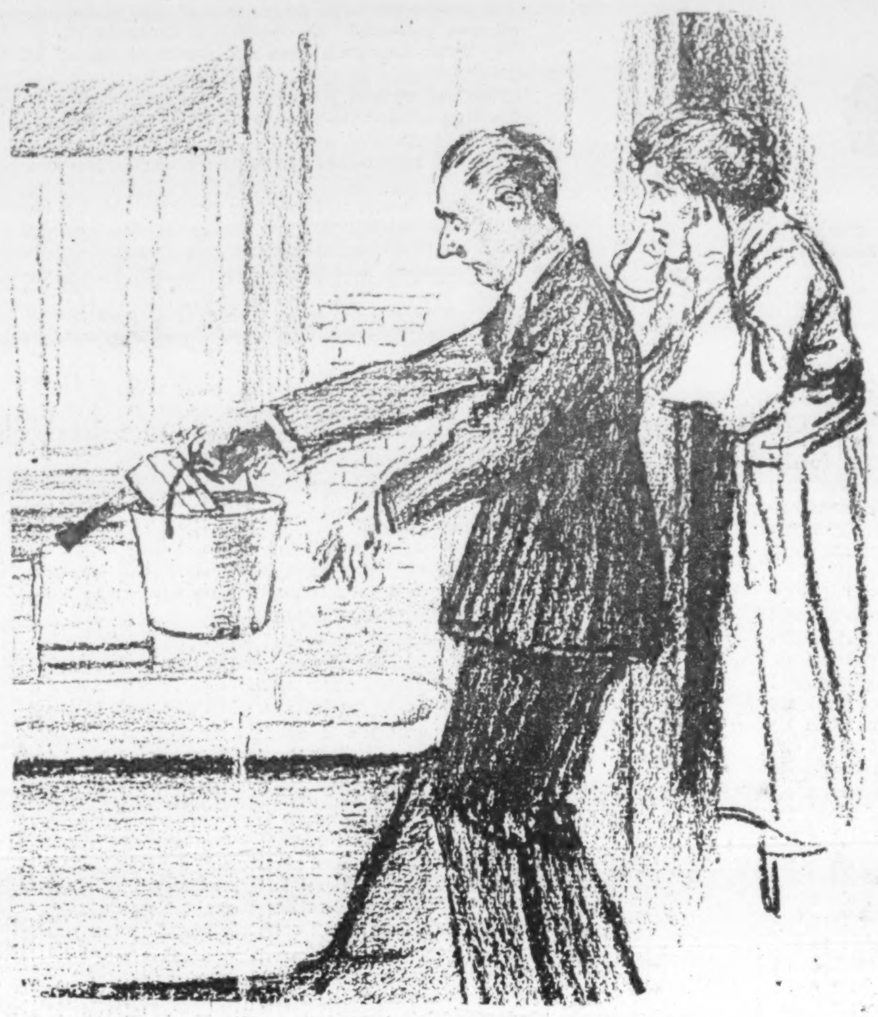
Character Sketches by W. E. HILL



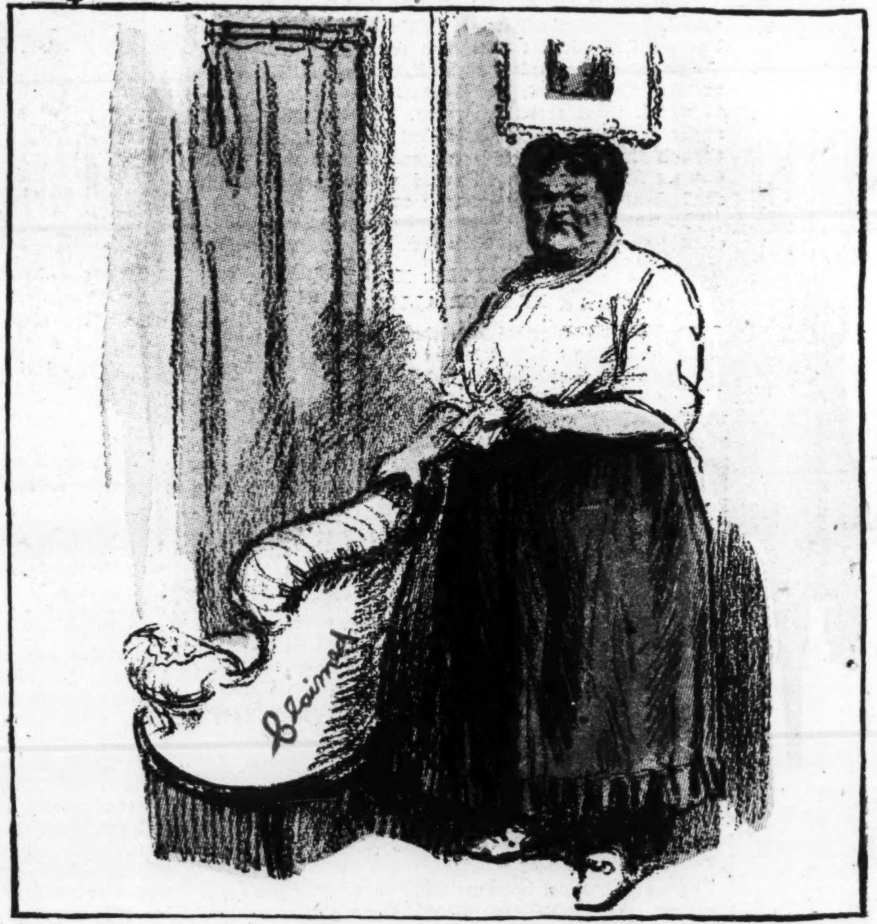
If it isn't one thing, it's another. When the bourgeoisie aren't engaged in sending bombs to each other, to get the ultra-radicals in bad, you can be pretty certain they are thinking up some deviltry to play on the poor proletariat. Here's a little gathering of "Red" agitators whose picnic under the trees has been sadly interrupted by a thunderstorm, and as Comrade Gene observes feelingly, "Ten to one the bourgeoisie are at the bottom of it, the fiends!"



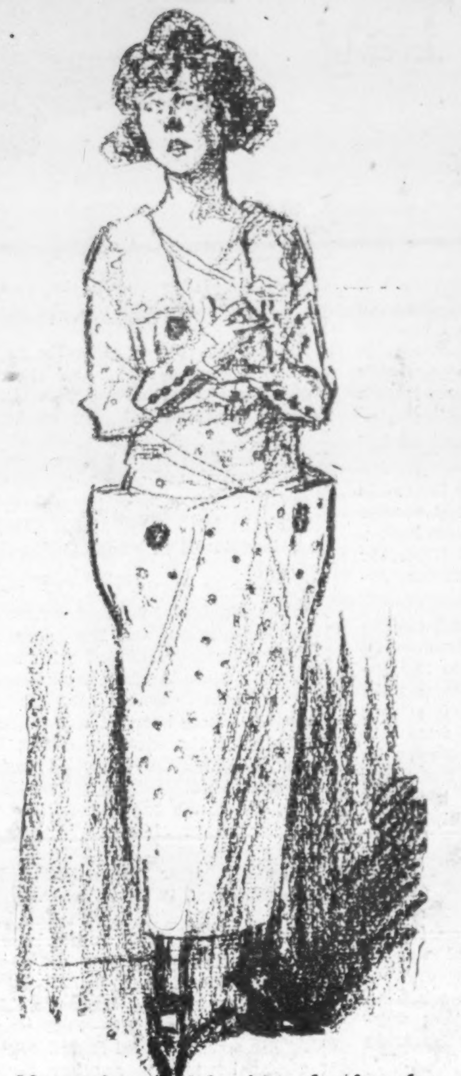
Somewhat in a turmoil are the reactions of Mr. Joe Rutt, who happened to be passing the headquarters of a radical publication when a raid by soldiers and sailors was in progress. "What was you doin' in front of the building," Mr. Rutt was asked, "if you wasn't a Bolshevist?"



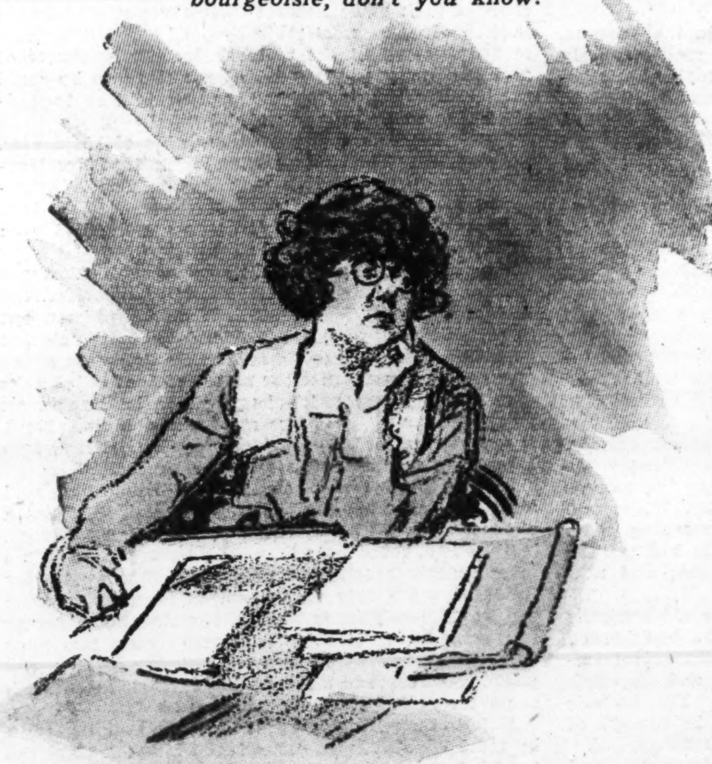
With all these infernal machines and bombs being sent through the mail, it was no time for Sister Edna's young man to mail her a box of candy—at least, Edna's brother is going to argue that way.



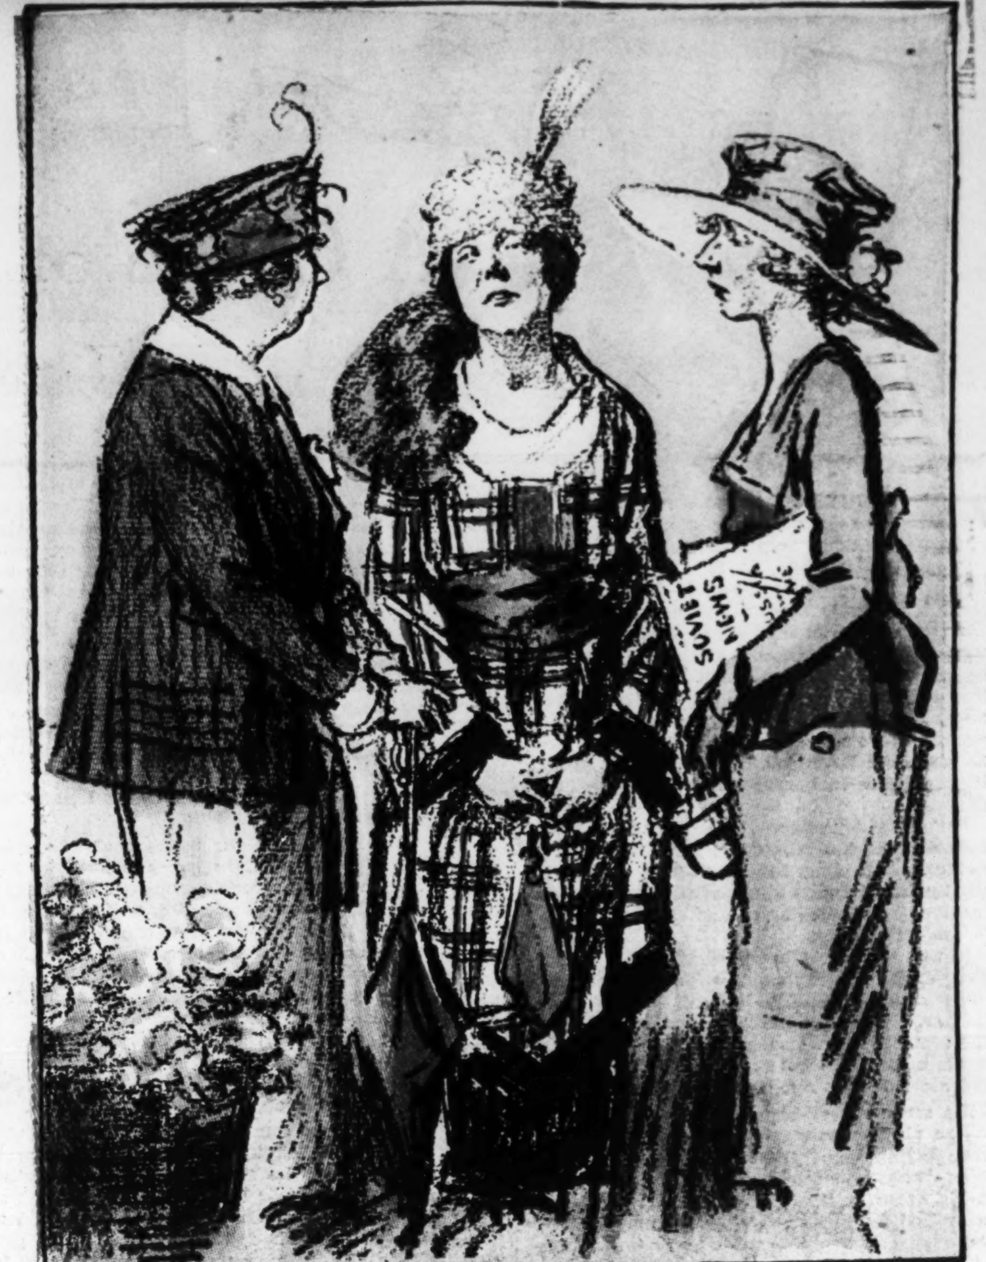
As for Mrs. Wottle, caretaker of the Browns' city house during the summer months, she is thoroughly Bolshevist. There are several pieces in the Browns' parlor which Mrs. Wottle hopes to annex for her own when the social revolution comes along, and, naturally, she is taking no chances of things being all picked over by some one else.



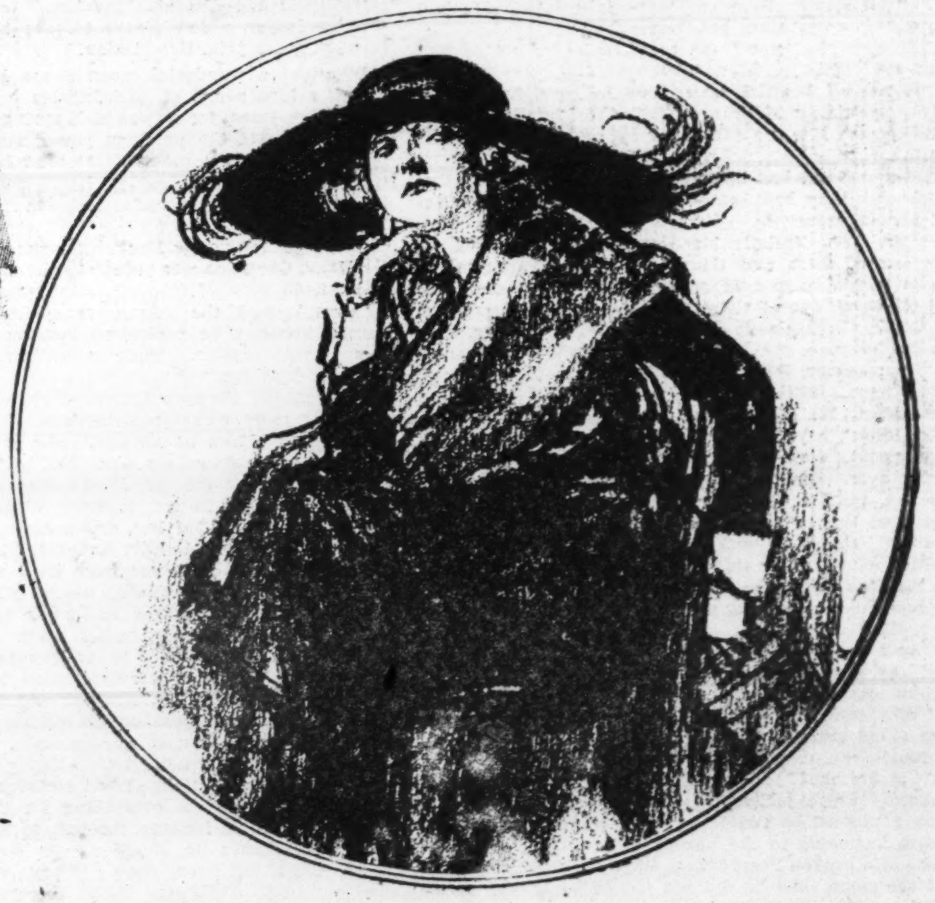
Annette, the society Bolshevist, who does her own thinking, simply can't decide what to think about the bomb outrages. It is at a time like this that one begins to realize there really is a lot that is awfully good about the bourgeoisie, don't you know.



Mrs. Mary Cluett undertook a paper on "Bolshevism in Russia—Is It a Success?" for the "Where Next" club, and has been conscientiously wading through the articles in "The New Republic," "The Review," "The Nation," "The Liberator," "The Outlook" and "The Dial." The condition of the lady's brain is somewhat akin to an omelet at this stage of the game.



"Of course, if I had ever thought they would really do anything, I should have dropped them long ago—if you know what I mean!" Three ladies of the parlor Bolshevist clan, who suddenly discover marked leanings towards the despised bourgeoisie after the bomb outrages.



Ethelle, super-showgirl of the "Kiss Papa" company, is out-and-out I. W. W., Bolshevik and everything else radical in her sympathies this morning. "Can y'imagine having to park your Rolls-Royce half a block away from the stage door to make way for the prima donna's cheap little American car!"

Intake nozzle of "wind tunnel" used in testing airplanes. It has an extreme diameter of 17 feet, tapering off to 7 feet. An exact model of the actual machine is placed at the entrance, through which different air currrents are blown at the rate of 75 miles an hour. It accommodates a model up to 36 inches wing span and stands an air force of 40 pounds to the square inch. Flow of air is produced by a 400-horse power motor connected to a 3-blade propellor. One part of the apparatus, a balance for measuring wind pressure, is so delicate that it will record a variation in force as small as one ten-thousandth of a pound. Thus the stability is minutely computed.

The gentle Lux way actually saves them

YES, there's tell-tale yellowness on all the cobweb threads. Your real Chantilly! Nearly a hundred years old and so very precious! In the old days who ever dreamed the time would come when you could launder it? Yet today you think nothing more of trusting priceless lace to bubbling Lux suds than you used to think of washing ginghams!

You simply stir up a bowlful of the richest lather and toss in your finest, filmiest belongings without a qualm. Fine laces, thinnest chiffons, exquisite table linens and woolens! Your daintiest curtains will stay whole, your silks lustrous, your blankets soft and woolly.

Delicate Lux suds! If you have never used Lux, you can't begin to appreciate how pure, how cleansing they are!

Lux comes in dainty, white flakes—pure and transparent. They melt instantly in hot water. You whisk them up into the richest, foamiest suds, that gently free the dirt! For silks or delicate colors, you simply add cold water until the suds are lukewarm.

No ruinous rubbing of fine fabrics! No injury to delicate fibres or coarsening of textures! The delicate lustre of your softest silks remains undimmed.

With Lux you just squeeze the delicate suds through the fabrics again and again—rinse in clear water once, twice, three times—and the garment is so fair and fresh that you would never know it had been washed.

Use Lux the moment a thing becomes soiled. The gentle Lux way of washing saves it from the damage even a little dirt does to frail things.

Lux won't hurt anything that pure water alone won't injure.

Get a package of Lux today from your grocer, druggist or department store.—Lever Bros. Co., Cambridge, Mass.

So quick! So easy! Launder all these things in dainty Lux suds

How to wash blankets

Use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water. Whisk Lux into a rich lather in boiling or very hot water, then add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Work the blankets about in the thick suds, sousing them thoroughly, but do not rub. Squeeze the cleansing suds again and again through soiled spots. Rinse in three waters the same temperature as that in which you washed them. Dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing water—but do not make a lather. This leaves the blankets softer and fluffier. Run them through a loose wringer; never twist. Hang in the shade to dry, in moderate temperature.

To wash silk underthings

Just drop a tablespoonful of Lux into half a bowlful of boiling or very hot water. Whisk into a rich, creamy lather. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip the garment through the foamy lather many times—work it about in the suds—do not rub. Rinse three times in clear, lukewarm water. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Roll in a towel. When nearly dry, press with a warm iron—never a hot one.

To wash fine silk blouses

Whisk a tablespoonful of Lux into a thick lather in half a bowlful of boiling or very hot water. Add cold water till lukewarm. Dip your blouse through the foamy lather many times. Squeeze the suds through it—do not rub. Rinse in three waters of the same temperature as the water in which you washed it. Squeeze the water out—do not wring. Roll in a towel to dry. When nearly dry press with a warm iron—never a hot one. Georgette crepe blouses should be gently pulled into shape as they dry and also should be shaped as they are ironed.

To wash your sweater

Use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to every gallon of water. Whisk Lux into a rich lather in boiling or very hot water, then add cold water to make the suds lukewarm. Swish your sweater about in the suds. Wash quickly, pressing the suds through the sweater, but do not rub. Rinse three times in water of the same temperature as that in which you washed it. Dissolve a little Lux in the last rinsing to leave your sweater soft and woolly. Never wring sweaters. Squeeze the water out, pull into shape, and spread on a towel to dry in the shade.

To wash collars and cuffs

Use a tablespoonful of Lux to every gallon of water. Dissolve in very hot water and whisk into a thick lather. Let white linen or cotton accessories soak for a few minutes. Then dip them up and down in the creamy lather. Do not rub. Press the suds again and again through very soiled spots. Put through three hot rinse waters. Dry in the sun. Wash georgettes, silks and colors as above but in lukewarm suds. Do not soak. Rinse three times, in lukewarm water. Roll in a towel to dry.

How to wash babies' woolens

To wash little woolens like new, use two tablespoonfuls of Lux to a bowlful of water. Dissolve in boiling or very hot water, whisk into a thick lather and add cold water to make suds lukewarm. Put the woolens in. Then squeeze the suds through the garments. Do not rub. Rinse three times in water the same temperature as the water in which you washed the garments, dissolving a little Lux in the last rinsing water. Squeeze the water out. Do not twist. Dry in a moderate temperature. Press with a warm iron.
